INVITATION TO THE GREAT EASTERN.

There was no more rioting yesterday. The military that had been under arms during Sunday night were dismissed early Monday morning, and not much was heard of them during the day. It was thought that the 6th Regiment was last night in the armory, ready for any sudden call. The weather was hot, and the citizens were among their flowers and vines, or in their beds sleeping off their two days' allowance of rum and riot.

We can only attempt to mark the late commotion over the broken ground of Worth-street and Bayard, and the deserted shutters of many of the houses in the Ward. The military were out early Monday morning, but were not called upon for any duty, only for emergency. Some companies were marched down in yesterday, and others were ordered that they had to be in readiness at the sound of the bugle.

The funerals announced for yesterday were all postponed in consequence of the unsettled appearance of the weather yesterday morning. They are announced to come off to-night, if the day is propitious. A grander display than usual is promised to make up for the disappointment.

The wounded died during the day at the New-York Hospital—WM. BUCKLEY, a boy, who was shot in the thigh while standing in Bayard-street, and WM. CARSON, who was stabbed in the groin with a knife. Carson died at 9 o'clock in the morning and Buckley about 4 in the afternoon. Inquests upon the bodies will be held to-day. Here the whole number who died these few days of night. The above 30 in number—comprises those who were wounded in the riots and brought to the New-York Hospital. The number there, including those who were accidentally wounded from the insanities of gunpowder on the Fourth, and who are now lying or have been received at this Hospital, is 45. A report was received in the afternoon, through Mr. PRAGER, by the Commissioners of Police, that there was considerable arising among the people of that ward that they would be attacked last night, by Engine Company No. 41. Arrangements were immediately made to throw a large number of Police into that Ward, (the Sixth,) and in the afternoon, Deputy Superintendent CLEVELAND made a circuit of the fighting locality, for the purpose of assuring the people of protection, and also to warn the disorderly of the consequences of a repetition of the scenes of Saturday and Sunday.

The office of the Metropolitan Police Commissioners in White-street yesterday was thronged with regular and special officers from the various Precincts, and with many others claiming business with the Police Commissioners or the Superintendents. A large crowd gathered without the building, and increased so rapidly and so blocked up the street and passage way that it was found necessary to clear the street of all saucy curious lookers-on, and the guardian either did not feel inclined to allow none to pass unless such had business.

There was no formal meeting of the Commissioners, though conferences were had with the General and Deputy Superintendents, and instructions were issued to the officers commanding the respective Precincts to be vigilant and strengthen the patrol.

It was determined to continue the special force for the present. To dispense with the military for the present, was another great question.

A person living at 82 Bayard-street called at the White-st office, saying he had the two young men who were under arrest for throwing bricks from the tops of a house in that street, upon the heads of the assailants. He had failed to obtain their release from the Justice, as they had been arrested by Coroner HOGAN and were held by his order. The Coroner stated he would immediately make the necessary affidavits, when the whole matter would be in the hands of the Justice, and he could do as he pleased; the assault was a murderous one, and in his judgment ought not to be discharged from custody upon any pretence. The man knew the "boys," as he called them; said they were good fellows, and could not have done what was charged against them.

The Police Commissioners.

The neighborhood of the White-street office was filled with citizens all the morning, some anxious to volunteer as special policemen, and others seeking excitement. They were all kept at a goodly distance from the door, however, by the police. In the afternoon the crowd thinned off considerably, and inside the office there was little excitement.

Several Second Warders yesterday called on the Commissioners at different times and requested them to appoint all the old police of the Second Ward special policemen, as there were among them many steady and experienced officers. They urged this, should this be done, at the next session of the Legislature the law could be so modified as to permit the confirmation of the "Specials" into regular officers. The Commissioners acknowledged the force of the argument presented, "but," said they, "the law is imperative that persons once dismissed from the Department can never be reappointed, and however much we might like to reappoint some of those men we conceive we have not the power." Another objection, which, probably, would be a paramount one, on the part of the men themselves, was that there was no provision made by law for the remuneration of special policemen.

The Excise Commissioners, at a late hour in the afternoon, had an interview with the Commissioners of Police. They came to ask cooperation with themselves in enforcing the Excise law. They requested the Commissioners of Police to instruct the Department to note well all the places where liquor is sold, and to report those persons that probably sell without license, the keepers of disorderly grog-shops, &c. The Commissioners promised the hearty cooperation of the department, and stated that directions to the same effect had already been given by them.

Inquests on the Dead.

CORONER PERRY'S EXAMINATION INTO THE CASES OF LAINTENBERGER, BOWMAN AND BERNARD.

Coroner PERRY commenced holding an inquest yesterday morning on the body of HENRY LAINTENBERGER, a native of Germany, 50 years of age, who was shot through the heart at the Bayard-street Riot, on the afternoon of July 4. Also on the body of a man supposed to be —— BERNARD, aged about 30 years, and whose late residence was given as No. 128 Division-street. Both of these bodies were brought from No. 88 White-street to the Dead House at the Bellevue Hospital. Also on the body of PATRICK ROWAN, a native of Ireland, 18 years of age, whose body the Jury visited at his late residence, No. 194 Varick-street. The following are the names and places of residence of the gentlemen composing

THE JURY.

Stephen H. Wendell, No. 27 Third-avenue.
Oliver H. Perry, No. 27 Third-avenue.
Arnold E. Reynold, Twelfth-street.
James Seymour, No. 27 Third-avenue.
W. H. Smith, No. 27 Third-avenue.
J. Meyman, No. 56 East Sixteenth-street.

Beyond viewing the bodies, no further proceedings were had in the morning, and the Coroner adjourned the further investigation till 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The following depositions were taken by the Coroner before a Jury had been sworn in:

Richard Quinn, residing at No. 67 Chrystie-street, employed at No. 86 Bowery, being sworn, deposes: That about two o'clock he heard cheering of men marching to No 40 Bowery; they made an attack on the place, breaking the window glass; saw two policemen chased; is a baker by trade; heard the noise a little after half past one; heard the noise outside; ran up the steps of the stoops and looked up the Bowery; could not see anything at first but heard cheering; saw soon after a crowd in front of No. 40 Bowery; they appeared there at a stand-still; seemed to be from seventy-five to one hundred strong; were armed with clubs; did not recognize them; went down into the cellar to tell the boss of the fight, and to be prepared for it; did not barricade the doors; remained inside all the time till the crowd went away; the place witness was in was also attacked; officers came down as soon as No. 40 Bowery was attacked; does not know the name of the policeman chased away by the mob; did beat the doors in; they attacked and throw stones; rioters could not get inside; did not see the Bowery Boys; they were driven away; fought about fifteen minutes previously; does not know who drove them away; did not go down to Bayard-street; does not know that the police arrested any; does not know the names of any engaged in the fight; does not know that a feud was existing between the Bowery Boys and the other gang; does not know whether pistols were fired.

Wm. A. Russell, officer of the Seventeenth Precinct Police, being sworn, says: On our return from the Park, about four o'clock yesterday afternoon, where we had been stationed, we were ordered to go to Mulberry-street, near Baxter, to quell a riot at that place; there were a large number of people about, hooting and shouting, throwing missiles; the streets were crowded; many women and children about; soon after reaching the spot a brickbat came flying past me, nearly hitting me; I looked around and saw the same person throw the second one; he was standing in the alley way of the house, about third door from Bayard-street in Baxter, the second brick hit me; I had reason to suppose that he threw the same at me; as soon as I recovered, I called for assistance; other officers coming, we went to the house into which he had run; tried to effect an entrance which was resisted; we beat down the door; we arrested him and took him to the Fifth Ward Station-House; I ascertained his name to be James Lane, and have identified him as such since; we found some two bushels of brickbats in the basement where the prisoner was.

The Inquest was adjourned to 2 o'clock, P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Jury met at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment, at the Coroner's office, No. 6 Centre-street.

Coroner PERRY, in his address to the Jury, commented on the importance of the subject under consideration. This whole matter ought to be fully and fairly investigated, to bring the offenders to justice as well as to prevent similar outrages in future. He had taken some testimony on the subject, which he would read to them. From the facts adduced by those witnesses, it appeared that considerable ill-feeling had existed for a long time between two rival factions in the Sixth Ward, which had finally brought on this riot.

The following testimony was then taken:

Charles Francis resides at No. 39 Bowery, and the first he saw of the riot was on Saturday, about 15 minutes to 2; heard a noise in the Bowery which woke him up; looked out of the window and went down street; saw a large crowd of young men and boys in front of No. 40 Bowery; the cry was raised "go in;" one attempted to go in; he was pushed back by a man coming out on the scoop, preventing the intruder from coming in; he succeeded in keeping him back; when he turned to go into the house again a stone was thrown against the door and another struck the man and prostrated him on the sidewalk; he laid there for a few seconds while the stones were flying from the assailants, thereupon the insiders shut up the place as fast as possible; think that but five or six were inside; they got up all the shutters but one; the mob then went to No. 36 Bowery, where they broke the window glass, hooting and shouting; met there with no resistance, but returned to Moss' Hotel, corner of Bowery and Bayard-street; one or two stones were thrown against it, but the mob desisted from further outrage, and proceeded further down Bayard-street; meanwhile, several young men from No. 36 Bowery came out, crying, "Go at them;" in a few moments they were greatly reinforced, and collected on the corner of Bowery and Bayard-street; they started in search of the "Dead Rabits;" returned in a few minutes to No. 40 Bowery; thinks they did not see the assailants; there was a calm for thirty minutes; went to bed; woke up in the morning at 3½ A. M., by a noise and shouts of "Where are they;" looked out and saw a mob throw stones; passed along the Bowery, throwing stones indiscriminately for about half an hour; there was no resistance; did not think there were more than 10 or 12; saw nothing more till the afternoon of July 4, at 5½ o'clock; knows nothing of the occurrences at the time; don't recollect of any feud between the "Dead Rabbits" and the "Bowery Boys," except at the last election; the former had the advantage of the latter, when they—the "Dead Rabbits"—tried to take possession of the poll-boxes; feelings of ill-will existed between the parties; does not know any of the rioters; saw officers standing there who took no part.

Wm. H. Smith, being sworn, resides No. 21 Bowery; is a special policeman; was standing at half-past one o'clock A. M. of yesterday morning at corner of Division and Bowery; saw a crowd of Chatham near Mulberry making a great noise and shouting; waited a little while; the mob came up Chatham to the Bowery; they went past cheering for Fernando Wood, with other noisy demonstrations; followed them up on the opposite side; came to a stand in front of No. 40 Bowery and commenced cheering; one of the mob went up and smashed the sash; witness ran across the street; the mob at the time commenced throwing stones; witness ran down No. 36 Bowery in the coffee and cake saloon; the mob collected in front of it and continued throwing stones; after exhausting their missiles they ran to Bayard-street; was in the saloon with six or eight men; cheered their assailants afterwards; could not find out who were the offenders; did not recognize any of the mob; no other officers were with witness; saw nothing more and went home; did not see any of the fighting on the afternoon of the Fourth; does not know of any ill-feeling since the last election existing between the parties.

Thomas Strong, being sworn, says he resides at No. 93 Orchard-street; is a policeman; saw the commencement of the riot; was in the Bowery, near Bayard, between one and half-past one o'clock A. M.; was going down the Bowery from Bayard to Division; saw a party of about 100 come from Mulberry or Mott streets; they hallooed and fired off pistols; they were young men and boys; when coming at Division met some young men, who advised him to get out of the Bowery; they saw I was an officer; was in company with another officer; the party they said was making for the Tenth Ward; that they had beaten some in the Fourth Ward; on arriving in Chatham-square they gave three cheers for Fernando Wood, and passed up the Bowery, armed with clubs and revolvers; witness turned into Division-street as they reached Chatham-square; went down Division-street while stones were being thrown at him and his companion; some followed in pursuit as far as Chrystie, while the rest went up the Bowery; witness went towards Bayard-street endeavoring to reach the Bowery but were driven back by rowdies who said "there goes a Policeman"; was driven back to Forsyth-street; went to the Station-house to get the Reserve; Sergeant DAVIS turned out all men in the house; about thirteen or eighteen, all went to the Bowery; sent to the Thirteenth Ward Station-house for help; the mob had dispersed when the Policemen arrived; the mob went through Bayard-street toward the Five-Points; after remaining for an hour, the Reserve were marched back to the Station-house, all being quiet; Sergeant DAVIS remained in the Bowery with five or six; a man came up, telling that a man named Robert Brown had been severely beaten corner Chatham and Mulberry streets, and wanted some assistance; went down with Sergeant DAVIS; fifteen or twenty young men from the Bowery followed to assist the Police; they were sober and quiet men; Sergeant DAVIS told them to stay behind and to come up if they saw their assistance was needed; when arrived on the place all was quiet; returned to the Bowery; everything being there also quiet, Sergeant DAVIS went to Station-house; at daylight several rowdies made their appearance corner Worth-street and Bayard, calling on the Bowery party to "come on;" crossed the Bowery to meet this party; passed near a brick pile below Elizabeth-street, when the mob threw stones and fired pistols against the police had to retire; the mob followed as far as Bayard and Bowery, when a general fight ensued between the Bowery Boys and Dead Rabbits; the latter called for three cheers for the Dead Rabbits and returned; quiet was then restored and witness went to the Station-house at seven o'clock; was called up in the afternoon; does not recognize any of the rioters; could not get down as far as the place of combat on Sunday afternoon; there was ill feeling existing between the parties since the last election; has not heard of any fighting since; does not know of any particulars of the fight; understands that the Five Point thieves are called "Dead Rabbits;" could not find the man called Robert Brown, who was beaten.

Patrick McCord, being sworn—Lives at 45 Allen street; is a policeman, and concurs in the testimony given by the preceding witness, except as to the commencement of the fight, which he did not see, being in the Station house on the reserve at the time; about two o'clock Sergeant DAVIS asked him to speak to the Bowery Boys, and persuade them to go home; done so accordingly; the Bowery Boys done so; called on Patrick Matthews and asked him if he would render assistance to witness if needed; Matthews replied he would cheerfully; saw nothing of him afterwards for about fifteen minutes, when he came up and offered his services to Sergeant DAVIS; the "Dead Rabbits" are thieves; there is another set called the "Black Birds," which consist principally of Irish; they are hand in glove with the "Dead Rabbits."

Robert C. Brown, being sworn, deposed that he lives at 9 Rutgers street; was going down Chatham street in the morning of the Fourth about four o'clock with some half-dozen others; a party of six or seven men beat a young fellow; one of his party interfered and tried to stop them; ten or fifteen were standing around and all were armed with clubs; they sang out "Kill the s—n of a b—h with a white hat on, meaning one of witness' friends who spoke up; witness' friends ran off then and he was only saved by being recognized by a man who told him not to hit him; witness does not know this man's name; they apologized afterwards, saying that they mistook his party for the Bowery Boys; they told him to leave, as he might get hurt; witness went down town afterwards; is not aware that there was a difficulty previously.

Andrew More being sworn, deposes that he lives at No. 16 Bowery; was present at the disturbance on Saturday morning, at four o'clock, in the Bowery; the first he noticed was a noise which he heard; looked out of the window; saw a crowd of people on the corner of Bayard and Bowery; heard firing of pistols and shouting; saw a party being chased down Division-street; knows some of the persons; went out at five, but did not see anything extraordinary; does not know anything about the "Dead Rabbits."

The inquest was then adjourned to 9 o'clock this morning.

The following is the testimony of Drs. FINNELL, WELTJE and FURMAN, who made the post mortem examination on the two bodies lying at the Bellevue Hospital, and who were subsequently recognized as the bodies of BERNARD and LAINTENBERGER:

Drs. Finnell, Weltje and Furman being sworn, say that they have made a post-mortem examination on the body of an unknown man at Bellevue Hospital, aged about 35 years; he was shot in the riot on Saturday last; we found a gunshot wound to the breast bone, large enough to admit two fingers; this passed through the right lung and base of the heart, causing an effusion of blood with the pericardium; the wound then extended through the body of the lung and passed out through the axila on the right side; his death was caused by internal hemorrhage, the result of a gunshot wound

Drs. Finnell, Weltje and Furman being sworn, say that they have made a post-mortem examination on the body of an unknown man, about 45 years old; he was bald-headed, and about five feet eight inches high; we found a gunshot wound in the chest, the ball entering the back, passing through the third dorsal vertebra, perforating the lung and coming out through the sternum, a little to the right of the medial line; his death was the result of a gunshot wound, producing laceration of the spinal cord and internal hemorrhage; from the size and character of the wounds it is evident that the gun or pistol must have been very heavily charged.

CORONER CONNERY'S EXAMINATION IN THE CASES OF WM. BUCKLEY, WM. CAHILL AND WM. PENTONEY.

Coroner CONNERY held an inquest yesterday morning upon the body of WM. PENTONEY, who was shot during the riot on Saturday afternoon, while looking out of a second-story window of house No. 78 Bayard-street. The following additional evidence was elicited:

Joseph Francis Fisharon, being duly sworn, deposes and says: I live at No. 78 Bayard-street; I knew deceased for about three years; deceased called to Mr. Peter Meany's house on the Fourth of July, at dinner time; he left in company with Mr. Meany's son, and returned at tea time, with young Mr. Meany and Timothy Conclkin; they came up stairs to the second-story front room, where we were looking at a row in the street; we all went to tea, and returned to the same room at about seven o'clock; we all again looked out of the windows, each advising the other not to do so; there are three windows in the room we were in, and one in a bedroom that opens into it from the street; I had just taken away Mrs. Meany and her two daughters from the bedroom window and placed them in the back room; I then returned to the front room and saw Mr. Peter Meany, Mr. Pentoney and Mr. Conclkin, looking from the centre window into the street; I then looked out of the window next the Bowery, and heard a noise and cry in the room; I turned around and saw the four persons above mentioned on the floor, except Mr. Meany's son; some of the ladies cried out, "Mr. Pentoney is shot;" I then saw that Mr. Pentoney was wounded in the forehead, and I went for a doctor and returned with him; the doctor proceeded to dress his wounds; I saw a body of men with guns proceed up Bayard-street as far as Mott; they fired in the direction of the Bowery; the other party at the Bowery were firing with pistols down Mott-street; the Bowery had a barricade; I saw a man advance from Mulberry-street toward a pile of bricks, about four houses from this; he laid his musket on the bricks and deliberately fired towards the Bowery; this man was shot almost in the act of firing, and he was carried away; the shot which killed Mr. Pentoney came from the Bowery side; I solemnly swear I don't know, either directly or indirectly, who fired the shot that killed Mr. Pentoney; I remained with Mr. Pentoney all the time till he died; he breathed very hard; he was attended by Drs. Carew and Wood; he never spoke, from the time he was shot; he died about half past one o'clock on Sunday.

Two other persons were examined, but their evidence afforded no new particulars.

After a brief address from the Coroner the Jury retired, and soon afterwards returned and rendered the following verdict:

That William Pentoney, the deceased, came to his death by gun-shot wounds received on the 4th day of July, 1857, at the hands of some persons unknown to the Jury.

As already stated, Mr. PENTONEY was a native of England, 28 years of age. He was employed as a cutter in DEVLIN's, Broadway, clothing establishment, and was on a visit at No. 78 Bayard-street when he received the fatal wound.

ON THE BODY OF WM. CAHILL.

The same Coroner resumed the inquest began the previous day, at No. 5 Mulberry-street, upon the body of WM. CAHILL, a native of Ireland, 28 years of age, who was also killed during the late riot. The deceased was in Mulberry-street when shot. The ball (from a gun) entered the abdomen, passed through the intestines, and lodged in the left iliac bone, producing internal hemorrhage, from which death speedily ensued.

The friends of the deceased and the neighboring inhabitants exhibited so much excitement at the beginning of the inquest, that the Coroner deemed it necessary for his own protection to call into requisition a squad of policemen. A great many witnesses were examined, but from none of them could any light be obtained as to the person by whom the fatal shot was fired. The following, among other evidence of a similar nature, was taken:

John Rocks, being duly sworn, deposes and says—I live at No. 6 Mulberry-street; I know William Cahill; yesterday I was standing at my door, (the hall door,) between 6 and 7 o'clock; I saw a fight at the corner of Bayard and Mulberry streets; I saw people running to and fro; I heard no shots fired; I was a little tipsy, and can't say who the party was that shot deceased; I swear solemnly I did not hear who the party was that shot deceased; I don't know any of the parties who were in the row.

Philip Murphy, being duly sworn, deposes and says—I live at No. 9 Mulberry-street; I know deceased; I saw him yesterday, about 1 o'clock; he was then sober; between 4 and 5 o'clock I was passing through Mulberry-street, when I saw a great crowd near the corner of Bayard-street; I heard several shots, but don't know who fired the shots; all I know is that I heard that a man named Roughan had a musket that missed fire, and that he was shot himself; I also heard that Patrick Lane, of No. 96 Mulberry-street, was beside deceased when he was shot; I did not stop to see who were firing; I solemnly swear that I don't know that deceased had an enemy.

Thomas White, being duly sworn, deposed as follows: I live at the house No. 11 Mulberry street; I knew deceased; I was in my own house yesterday afternoon when deceased was shot; I was coming around the corner with my mother when I saw deceased standing there; it was about six o'clock; there was nobody in his company then; I did not see him afterwards until I saw him brought home; I don't know any of the men who brought him there; I don't know that deceased had an enemy.

Michael Finane, being duly sworn, deposed that he lived at No. 6 Mulberry-street; that he knew deceased; that he saw the row in Mulberry-street, and heard several shots fired; nobody told him who shot deceased; saw him brought out of the row after he was shot; he did not know any of the men who were engaged in the row. In conclusion, the witness stated that he knew nothing further about the occurrence.

Patrick Lane, being duly sworn, deposed as follows: I know deceased; I was with him at his house yesterday, about six o'clock; I went to the corner of Bayard and Mulberry streets and placed my back against the wall, when deceased came up and asked me for a smoke; I told him he should get it; he then said, "Come up here a piece and you will see some fun;" we went, and met a crowd, among whom I saw a man loading a gun; I did not know him; I saw another man with a gun also; I saw the first mentioned man fire the gun, but did not see any one wounded; deceased left me and went into the crowd, and then I lost sight of him; deceased had no firearms in his possession; he did not tell me he was going to have a fight with any one; I solemnly swear that I do not know who shot deceased; neither did I hear; I don't know any one of the four persons who brought deceased home.

Drs. FINNELL and WELTJE and FURMAN gave the result of the post mortem which they had made.

The Jury rendered a verdict of "Death from a gunshot wound in the abdomen, &c., inflicted by some person unknown," &c.

ON THE BODY OF WM. BUCKLEY.

WM. BUCKLEY aged 13 years, who received a gunshot wound in the thigh while standing in Bayard-street on Saturday afternoon, died at the New-York Hospital about 9 o'clock yesterday morning. Coroner CONNERY on being notified of the fact, empanelled a Jury and proceeded, but on examination of the body, the inquest was adjourned till 9 o'clock this morning for the purpose of collecting testimony.

Police Returns.

The following is an abstract of the returns to the Deputy-Superintendent yesterday. It will be seen that the City is generally quiet:

Sergeant WEED, of the First Precinct, sends in a blank return.

Inspector HOPKINS, of the Third Precinct, reports one arrest for intoxication.

The return of Sergeant BANTA, of the Fourth Precinct, is blank.

Sergeant HUTCHINGS, of the Fifth Precinct, reports ten arrests. He adds: Joseph de Jongues, a Frenchman, residing at No. 91 Franklin-street, after passing through Centre and Franklin streets very quietly, was assaulted by some person unknown, who fired a pistol at him, the ball taking effect near the temple. De Jongues almost at the same moment received a blow from a club on the same spot, but had courage enough to keep his spirits up. He was conveyed home by some citizens. He is now delirious, but his wounds will probably not prove fatal.

Sergeant NATHANIEL T. HICKS, of the Sixth Precinct, makes the following return—[It is the riot which was reported yesterday morning in the TIMES.]

"Another serious riot occurred in this District last evening. It appears that the gang of rowdies called Dead Rabbits got in conflict with another gang of a similar stamp who generally congregate in Centre, Pearl and Elm streets. The two gangs, on the night of the 4th inst., were connected together in the assault made on the Police on that day, and yesterday got up a quarrel about who were the "best gang of rowdies" on that occasion. From that they got into a general fight, during which stones were thrown in great quantities, and fire-arms were fired. During the fight a number were shot and taken to the Hospital. Sergeant HICKS, with a squad of ten policemen, was sent to the scene of riot, and accordingly left No. 88 White-street, proceeded through Broadway to Worth and Centre-streets, where there was a mob of full 3,000 or 4,000 congregated, and engaged in a general fight, extending from Centre-street down Worth to the Five Points. Seeing that it was useless for such a small number of policemen to interfere, Sergeant HICKS returned with the squad, and reported the state of things to Commissioner DRAPER, who then sent for the military. During the intervening time it was rumored that the rioters intended to attack the head-quarters No. 88 White-street, and the police force was kept in White and Elm streets to protect the same. After a brief space of time the 71st and 7th Regiments arrived, when Deputy Superintendent CARPENTER and Sergeant HICKS led off, followed by the police and the 71st Regiment in the rear of the police, and marched through the fighting district, ordering all persons to go to their homes, and also closing all places where liquors were being sold. I should state that General HALL was with us, and we were throughout subject to his orders. At eleven o'clock every thing was quiet, and the military and police were allowed to take some rest. Most of the police had had no rest for two days and nights previous.

Three arrests were made—two of persons who threw missiles from the top of a house, corner of Mulberry-street, and one of a man who was fighting in the streets."

Sergeant CAMERON, of the Seventh Precinct, reports two arrests for drunkenness. He adds: "There was no serious row or riot in this District yesterday, though large gangs of men were going about the District very much excited and ready for a fight. We kept our force as a reserve most of the day in the house; we thought it advisable to do so from appearances in the District. The latter part of the night we sent a small platoon of men out on patrol. The District was quiet after 12 o'clock this morning. At 6 A. M. we dismissed most of our special force to rest."

Inspector TURNBULL, of the Eighth Precinct, reports five arrests, as follows: Sarah Ring, prostitute, drunk and disorderly; Nora Taylor, prostitute, assault with intent to kill; Catharine Riley, drunk in the street; Mary Moore, drunk and disorderly; John Williams, colored waiter, petit larceny. He adds: About 12 o'clock M., Sunday, Sergeant GLENNY was examining a revolving pistol that had been left with him, to see if it was loaded, when it accidentally went off, fracturing the thumb of the left hand so badly that it had to be amputated.

About 6 o'clock P. M., a woman named Nora Taylor made an assault upon Henry Waters with a dirk knife, inflicting a severe wound in his left breast. Mr. Waters had been living with this woman for the last three years, and has had some difficulty before this. In the afternoon, she threatened his life, and followed him to the station-house, and while Mr. Waters was asking protection from Officer Roberts, the woman made the attack—cutting Officer Roberts' hand badly. She was arrested. Dr. Turner was sent for and dressed the wounds. This woman appeared determined to kill Waters. Before she made the attack, she entered the drug store opposite the station-house and asked for a glass of water. The Doctor noticed that she took a powder from her pocket and mixed with the water. He asked her what it was. She answered that it was morphine, and said she was in the habit of taking it. With the above exceptions, everything passed off quietly in this district. Most of the places where liquor was sold, cheerfully complied with the law, by promptly closing their places of business.

Sergeant SEBRING, of the Ninth Precinct reports five arrests for intoxication.

Sergeant DAVIS, of the Tenth Precint says: "Everything passed off quietly in our district. Yesterday, no disturbance occurred worthy of notice. At about 7 o'clock P. M. word was received at the Station-house that the fight had been resumed in Bayard-street, near the Bowery; the whole force of the Precinct was soon mustered, and on arriving at the corner of Bowery and Bayard-street, we found that there had been no fighting, but every preparation was making for a general riot; the force was stationed in the Bowery, and remained on duty during the night." Two arrests were made. A lost boy named Thomas Dixon was sent to the Almshouse.

Inspector SQUIRES, of the Eleventh Precinct, reports one arrest, viz.: Henry Burns, disorderly conduct; throwing stones at the officer.

Inspector FORTUNE, of the Twelfth Precinct, reports three arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Sergeant STREET, of the Thirteenth Precinct, says: "About 4 o'clock, Sunday afternoon, officer Lewis and special officer Howell discovered a fire in the clothing store of J. G. Sallenger, No. 396 Grand-street. They broke open the doors and removed some of the goods to the Station-house. The firemen were very quickly on the ground and confined the flames to the store. Officer Lefty, of Tenth Precinct, with a section of men, assisted in keeping the place and saving the property. From what we could learn it was, doubtless, the work of an incendiary. The following is the insurance: St. Marks, $1,200; Brooklyn, $1,000; Remson, $1,500; Excelsior, $2,000. Damage estimated at $20,000. Two women were arrested for drunkenness."

Sergeant WILLIAMSON, of the Fourteenth Precinct, sends in a blank return.

Inspector DILKES, of the Fifteenth, reports three arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

Special Aid SCHUYLER, of the Sixteenth Precinct, reports two arrests, viz.: Mary Smith, intoxication; Thomas Rooney, insanity.

Inspector HARRY, of the Seventeenth Precinct, reports: "That Sunday passed off comparatively quiet. No serious disturbance. In the afternoon a slight difficulty took place in First-avenue, in the corn. In reference to closing liquor stores and other places of the like character, the parties on being notified, manifested, for the most part, a willingness to obey the law."

Sergeant BENNETT, of the Eighteenth Precinct, reports two arrests, one lost child sent to Almshouse, two lost children restored to parents. He remarks: "At 7 P. M. a parcel of rowdies occupied the railroad cross on First-avenue between Fourteenth and Twenty-sixth streets, and robbed the conductors. I went down there, and saw no chance of doing anything to quell the rioters, with the small force at my command, but went immediately to No. 88 White-street when the Commissioners ordered the military out. When they arrived the rioters had dispersed, and all was quiet. If I had had possession of the old Station-house I think there would not have been any trouble whatever in the Ward. Having no place to confine prisoners, it was useless to arrest them."

Sergeant BYLES, of the Nineteenth Precinct, reports three arrests for fighting in the streets, petit larceny and intoxication.

Sergeant CURRY, of Precinct No. 20, reports one arrest for disorderly conduct. "I have notified," says he, "the liquor shops to close up. About one-half complied, and appeared satisfied to do so. Some others insulted the officer and refused to close; the names I will send in my next return. This precinct was generally very quiet for the last 24 hours."

Inspector SPRIGGS, of the Twenty-first Precinct, reports four arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. He observes: "The citizens of the Ward called on us in great numbers yesterday, to congratulate us on the order maintained in this district on the 4th inst. I am glad to be able to say that there was no serious disturbance yesterday. Some three or four, whose patriotism had not cooled down, commenced a disturbance, but they were immediately arrested and taken before Justice Davison, who committed them to get sober."

Sergeant VAN OSDEN, of the Twenty-second Precinct, reports: A boy named Daniel Tracy was found lying insensible in Fiftieth-street, near Eighth-avenue. He was taken to the Station-House and attended by Dr. Ives. His friends were afterwards notified and they conveyed him to his home. The front door of house No. 128 West Forty-third-street was found open by officers Scott and Jewett, who aroused the inmates and the house was searched, but nothing was missed. A lost child was brought in at 2 P. M. and restored to its parents at 10½ P. M.

ANOTHER CAUSE ALLEGED FOR THE SUNDAY EVENING RIOT.

The origin of the disturbance in Anthony-street, as related by Rev. Mr. PRAGER, was as follows: About 4 o'clock in the afternoon, several lads from 14 to 17 years of age, found a hand-cart "lying around" loose in Centre-street near Worth, and supposing the owner to be at a safe distance, seized on it and drew each other, on it alternately through the streets thereabouts. The owner of the cart, after the boys had been diverting themselves for an hour or two, hearing what was going on, sent down his son, a small boy, to order the cart brought back. The urchin was only laughed at, and the proprietor himself then came down and angrily ordered the boys to give up his property. During the altercation one of the boys was struck by the owner of the cart, and one or two among the crowd already assembled, took up the cudgels for the lad, which soon drew together a large crowd. A regular fisticuff and rough-and-tumble fight now ensued, and continued until the strength of the parties was exhausted, when the belligerent parties moved off respectively up and down Worth-street. At this moment, when it needed only a spark to rekindle the old flame, a solitary brick thrown from an adjoining house, quickly brought on between the Greeks the tug of war again. Pistols now began to be used freely, but without much effect. An old man named CONELLY, one of the Five Points party, was struck a fearful blow in the face with a brickbat, knocked prostrate, and brutally kicked while down. His son, the proprietor of a whisky shop on the corner of Worth-street and Cow Bay, and one of the rioters, seeing his father so brutally beaten, became greatly exasperated, and fired rapidly at the Centre-street rowdies a double-barreled gun loaded with buck and other large shot. Most of the execution done by firearms was occasioned by this gun.

An Ex-Municipal policeman, named SHERLOCK, who is said previously to have fired several pistol shots at the Points party, was severely wounded in the face by a discharge from the shot-gun.

It was at this point that Mr. L. M. PRAGER, of the House of Industry, rushed in among the combatants, many of whom knew him, and at the peril of his life finally succeeded in quelling the rioters. He first mingled with the Pointers, and implored them to cease firing and disperse, which they consented to do, provided the other party would also leave the ground. He next proceeded, by way of Leonard-street, to the Centre-street party, and succeeded in quieting them. But no sooner had they agreed to desist, than a solitary shot was fired from the front of the opposing party, which threatened to defeat all his attempts at pacification. Finally they consented to retire, provided Mr. PRAGER would secure the double-barrel shot-gun in the hands of young CONELLY, which he at last did.

WHAT STOPPED THE RIOT?—CLERICAL OR CIVIL INFLUENCE?

The statement in the TIMES of yesterday, representing Ex-Captain LEONARD as having been chiefly instrumental in persuading the rioters to leave off battering each other, we are requested by Mr. PRAGER to correct, as being altogether untrue. He says it was not till the shot-gun had been removed from the hands of CONELLY, and the parties had about given over the contest, that Captain LEONARD came on the ground, or at least made himself conspicuous there.

The intimation thrown out in some of the City papers of yesterday that the old or Municipal Police incited the belligerents to attack each other, Mr. PRAGER assures us is entirely unjust. On the contrary he knows that they exerted themselves to suppress the row.

EX-CAPTAIN LEWIS AND THE SEVENTH WARD RIOT.

Ex-Captain LEWIS, of the Seventh Ward, has put forth a sworn statement, backed by those of several friends, in which he denies explicitly the charge that he incited, or in any way encouraged, the riot at the foot of Jackson-street, on Saturday, at which several Metropolitan Policemen were attacked, and badly beaten. On the contrary, he solemnly avers, that he interfered only to suppress the riot, and appease the excited crowd, which he finally succeeded in doing, and that he did not interfere at all until after he had been frequently requested to do so, fearing that his motives would be misconstrued.

THE "BOWERY BOYS" ASK FOR FAIR PLAY.

The "Bowery Boys," so called, are sensitive upon points of honor. They deny, through [illegible] Friday and Saturday also the visitors were most numerous, the members of both Houses and the representatives of Foreign Courts being alike anxious to survey this remarkable element of speech. The whole of the apparatus, consisting of batteries, [illegible] and under-ground wires, with all the apparatus necessary to [illegible] and sisters to the Agamemnon will then be able to see at a glance the mode in which the telegraph will be made, and the dangers and difficulties which [illegible] the operation. At present the wire to witness the details connected with its manufacture extends to the parent establishment—the Gutta Percha Company's Works, where the core of the cable is formed, and the copper conductor coated and insulated. On Saturday Lord WYNFORD, Admiral Sir WILLIAM PARKER, with Rear-Admirals Sir HENRY MARTIN, PARSHAW, BOUXZINE and MAGRIN, with other naval and scientific gentlemen, were at the works to inspect the whole process of coating. A number of experiments were tried, and fuses were fired under the canal near the Gutta Percha Company's Works through a coil of wire 65 miles long.

Our first invitation to dine from the people of Liverpool was fixed upon as "a week from next Saturday," and was accepted by the Captain as a matter of course. When, however, the almanac was consulted, a leaf was found turned down upon that day—the 4th of July—and it is not very probable that we shall dine anywhere then, except under our own flag. The condition of our ship, and the very small space we have to spare, will prevent us making any pretentious demonstration.

It is said that if any accident happens to laying down the cable, so that the work is not completed this season, we are to return here and wait until next Spring to attempt it anew. Time will prove whether there be any foundation for such a report. The great alterations that have been made in the Niagara would rather indicate that there was. G.

THE ELECTIONS IN FRANCE.

How they are Conducted in Paris—Scenes and Incidents of Election Day—Success of the Government Candidates.

PARIS, Monday, June 22, 1857.

The election commenced yesterday morning throughout France, and will close this afternoon at four o'clock. The result, in Paris at least, may perhaps reach Liverpool by telegraph in time to go out by the steamer that carries this letter. I have been about among the people at the elections, and propose to give you the result of my observations.

I started early yesterday morning on a general round, and stopped first at the principal voting place in the Faubourg St. Marcel, the quarter of the chiffonniers. The first impression I received on approaching the place of election, was the sinister physiognomy of the affair. At the door, over which waved the tricolor, (it was a communal school house,) stood two soldiers of the line, with their muskets. Inside the door, there was a policeman. On the pavement near the door, there were three men in blouses; one held in his hand a bundle of tickets of the Government candidates; another, those of the first Republican ticket, and the third those of the second Republican ticket. It was therefore true that the Government allowed the distribution of opposition tickets at the polls. At each side of the door, the bills of the various candidates, and the official notices relating to the election, were stuck up. A few loungers were reading these and standing around outside and inside the door, not eight persons in all. Every minute or two, a voter approached, and the man holding the tickets, each extended a ticket toward him; but not a word was pronounced by anybody, nor was there any manifestation of anxiety on one part or the other. During the ten minutes that I stood about the door of this poll, I did not hear a word spoken. It was this unusual and death-like silence which gave the operation the sinister physiognomy I have already mentioned. But this was not all. During that ten minutes only one man of all those I saw enter to deposit their votes, boldly took a Republican ticket, and deposited it without wincing. Most of the voters were either provided with a ticket, and refused those offered, or took all three, and folding each alike, chose the right one, and deposited it in such a way that the judges could not see. I saw two workmen approach together, each took a ticket of the three candidates, then stepped aside, and thrusting two of the tickets into their pockets, folded up a Republican ticket, and then went back and voted. The dead silence which prevailed, the sneaking manner of the voters as well as of those who held the tickets, were suggestive of anything else than freedom and free elections.

Leaving this quarter I stopped at several polling places until I arrived at the Faubourg St. Antoine—the most dangerous of the Faubourgs of Paris. Here I visited two polling places, one of which was in the Rue Popincourt. The same arrangement was everywhere visible about the door: two soldiers on guard, a policeman to give information and preserve order, the three men (or two, where there were but two candidates,) to hand out tickets, and the same silent approach, one by one, and almost at regular intervals, of voters, the same by-playing in the changing of tickets, and the same general sneaking physiognomy. There were no crowds, not even a group, anywhere. There was no loud talking, in fact scarcely any talking at all, and only in one place did I see any one smile, and that was at the Rue Popincourt. It is to be supposed in charity that the men who indulged in this bit of sunshine were not conscious of the nature of their occupation for the moment.

I entered all the voting places, invariably took all the tickets offered me, and, after seeing the interior operation, spoke to the policeman to obtain directions to the next voting place—leaving the impression that I had made a mistake in my district, for only supposed voters entered the voting room. Here is what I observed in the interior: There was a ballot-box, judges of election, and a general arrangement much the same as at home. The voter showed his card of election, furnished him previously on presentation of his papers, it was compared with the register on which he had signed his name at the moment of receiving the card, and, if found all right, his ticket was received and placed in the box, folded exactly as he handed it to them. The secrecy of the ballot-box was religiously observed, and so far as a looker-on could judge, the election was honorably conducted.

From the Faubourg St. Antoine I went to the Rue de la Bourse, near the Bourse, where they were voting for General CAVAIGNAC; from there to Notre Dame, on the island, where GARNIER-PAGES is a candidate, and from there to the School of Medicine, where the Republicans and Legitimists, or at least the Orleanists of the Faubourg St. Germain, were voting for M. VAVIN, former deputy, against the imperial candidate, M. FOUCHE.

The most animation, the most rapid voting, was in General CAVAIGNAC's district.

It was rare to see anywhere more than one man approach at a time to the ballot-box: men were afraid to let even their neighbors know for whom they voted.

There was an exception in the case of soldiers, and here I wish to make an observation which the journals have not dared to make. The Government, there is every reason to believe, has "colonized" enormously, by means of its soldiers. Just see how easy this can be done. Suffrage in France is universal. A soldier is always at home in whatever barrack his officer commands him to stop. The barracks in Paris are equally distributed over the city. Just before the election, the Government, on pretext of guarding against disorder on the day of election, augmented the garrison of Paris twenty, thirty or forty thousand men—no one knows how many; and there is every reason to believe that these supplementary troops were distributed entirely with a view to cast votes where votes were needed. I do not know that this is the fact, but here are the proofs I can offer you. In General CAVAIGNAC's district I did not see a single soldier vote. The General is popular with the soldiers, and so, on that day, no soldiers were necessary in his district, "to preserve order." They were stationed in districts where the Republican candidate had no particular attraction for them, and where the Government could count surely on their votes. In effect, I saw as much of the other polling places, large numbers of soldiers voting. GISBERT, worn and his pipe layers arose vividly to my recollection.

At the polling place on the island I was astonished to meet M. DE HUBNER, the Austrian Ambassador, alone, with stick in hand, quietly no doubt taking notes, so as to form his own appreciation of a French election under the Empire.

I now return to the general subject of the election.

It appears that the Government misunderstood the meaning of M. HAVIN, in the article which gained for him the warning against his journal, Le Siècle. I send you the article, and you will see, in effect, that the [illegible] suspected by the Government of attacking [illegible] in ambiguous. I have [illegible] which I [illegible] the article, and [illegible] at least [illegible] original.

[illegible] this morning was received at the office of the [illegible] an immediate warning that the journal [illegible] was proposed to [illegible] on the day after [illegible] in other words, to follow the victim up with a still stronger case, and thus dare the Government to a suppression of the journal. It was thought, and no doubt justly, that its suppression would secure the triumph of the Republican cause in the city. While [illegible] of the journal. (A suppressed journal always has a hope of revival under another name.) But a gentleman suggested that in all probability the journal would not be suppressed till the close of the ballot-box to-day. That put another face on the matter; there was nothing more plausible. So better counsels returned to the hostile Siècle, and it concluded to restrain its thunders, and not uselessly bite off its own nose.

The violence of the Government papers against the Republican candidates, a violence that is more marked this morning after one day's voting than before, shows that they have fears of the result. Their tactics is to throw ridicule upon the Republican division—a division so ridiculous in itself that I cannot but approve every word uttered against it, no matter from what source; and to conjure up before the eyes of a people tired of revolutions, the bloody spectres of February and of June. Thus the Constitutionnel tells the people: "It is not CAVAIGNAC they ask you to vote for; it is for LOUIS BLANC, it is for LEDRU ROLLIN, it is for the ghost of the bloody demon of revolution and desolation! CAVAIGNAC is but the mask thereof!"

The Government knows too well the danger of allowing the slightest Republican leaven in the Legislative Chamber, and especially such leaven as CAVAIGNAC, and CARNOT, and GOUDCHAUX would carry there; and hence its terror at the bare possibility of these gentlemen passing its threshold.

All the efforts that have been made to suppress the scandal of a division in the Republican ranks, remain without result. Between M. OLLIVIER and M. GARNIER-PAGES, Republican candidates in the 5th District, the war is fierce. This morning, at 6½ o'clock, bill-posters suddenly put up bills all over this District, signed GARNIER-PAGES, which reminded one of the incendiary bulletins of the revolutionary epoch. Soon large crowds gathered around them, and each reader, as he finished, wondered that the Police did not tear them down. They gave a brief history, in that ejaculatory, convulsive style peculiar to French politicians, of his ministerial service, and called on his party to sustain him under the Empire. This was a little coup d'état on the part of M. GARNIER-PAGES, and, perhaps, by this time his bills are torn down.

The excitement, however, on this election is not great nor profound. There are certain names, certain chiefs of parties, certain great leaders of public opinion, who have refused to allow their names to be used as candidates, or to take any active part in the election, and the indifference of these chiefs has extended to their partisans. Certainly, CAVAIGNAC, GOUDCHAUX, BEFMONT, GARNIER-PAGES, JULES SIMON, LABOULAYE, are remarkable men—men of great talent and of undoubted integrity, but they do not carry the prestige of such names as THIERS, GUIZOT, VILLEMAIN, DE BROGLIE, DE REMUSAT, &c. There are men who were before the people as leaders for thirty years, and their names would have brought out a class that hold a large part of the money-power in their hands; but they refused, and the contest remains between the Republicans and Imperialists.

The opinion is very general, and this is a supposition that occupies a good deal the attention of the Government, that the Republican candidates, if elected, will not take the oath to support the Emperor, the Imperial Family and the Constitution of the country. It would seem impossible indeed that such men as compose the majority of the list for the department of the Seine could bring their consciences to such an act of treason to their political sentiments. The Government, it is said, intends if they refuse after having been elected, to make a law which will compel all candidates in the future to declare their intentions in that regard; and only those who announce that they will serve if elected will be acknowledged by the Government as legal candidates.

In the departments, of which there are 86, there are 61 candidates running in opposition to Government candidates. Some of those opposition candidates, however, are not inimical to the Government. Gen. CAVAIGNAC has been nominated and has accepted, in seven different departments.

The Greytown Bombardment in the British Parliament.

From the London Globe, (Ministerial print,) June 22.

There was so little agreement last night among the several critics of the conduct of Ministers with reference to the Greytown outrage, (which was, however, condemned on all sides as it deserved,) as to create a strong presumption that they were right in following the advice of their law officers. This, at least, is certain, that whatever other course they had taken would have been visited with equal censure from one or other of the objectors of last night.

It is also certain (and we are not in the least disposed to dissemble the fact) that any party in Parliament, disposed to question any demand of our Government on the United States, is sure of being backed by a strong commercial and philanthropic interest "out of doors." Mr. BENTINCK observed:

"There was no use blinking the fact, but there was a party who had always threatened to turn out the Government if they dared to assume a firm and manly attitude in any dispute with America. The advocates of that pusillanimous policy were governed by the sole consideration that we were dependent upon the United States for the raw material of one of our national manufactures. We do not think our dependence on the United States for cotton—nor even the entire extent in which English and American commercial interests have become connected—form the sole motives for what Mr. BENTINCK stigmatizes as "a pusillanimous policy." That policy, whatever epithet it may deserve, or may not deserve, results from a distinction we cannot help drawing between that portion of the great Transatlantic community, with whom we come in contact personally or commercially, and the American political Democracy, as represented by the Federal rulers of the day. The intellectual and moral aristocracy of both countries desire to be friends; but, in the younger country, that aristocracy is far enough from invariably guiding the national councils. The "Irish vote" alone goes a great way in the great towns of the Union to give an impulse to the American Democracy more or less hostile towards England, and the "Far West," in its wild remoteness from European influence, might be incited to follow such an impulse. The Manufacturing Protectionists of the Northern States, and the Slavery-Extensionists of the Southern, have their respective grudges against us. Upon the whole we believe it would be easier in America than in England to get up a war-cry with the kindred country, and much more difficult to avert the consequences.

It cannot be supposed that, in a purely military point of view, we are afraid of those consequences. But we don't want to have vessels of war replace those of commerce on the ocean which at present unite us with America. We should inflict and suffer immense losses—that we freely will enough; what we cannot so well perceive is, who would gain—unless those who would like to see the great progressive communities of English race wasting their strength and resources in conflict with each other. Human unreasonableness may produce the necessity for such conflicts; we place no great faith in democratic reasonableness to avert them; we would yield no point of national honor, or recognized and legitimate national interest, for that purpose—well assured that such concessions could but encourage encroachment and all manner of collisions. But where every motive that can influence rational beings is so plainly and positively on the side of amicable relations as between England and America, one cannot but hope Reason will triumph. The stronger minds in all those living masses, the elements of which only, like that of a scattered grains of gunpowder, gives them power for mischief

LETTERS FROM OVER THE SEA.

NUMBER SIX.

MONDAY, April [illegible]

One by one the cables slip—one by one the ships are loosed—one by one the sails fall heavily, the anchor leaves and the good ship floats down the bay. To our eyes and ears seemed emblem of a heart-string, that snapped, to place the sea and many thousand miles between those who love. But it is a day so glorious, so balmy and so blessed, that one is almost allured to forgetting the receding shore, kindred, home and country, in the enjoyment of the life just opening, so new and grand, to those who have never before been out upon the pathless deep.

"The sea, the sea, the open sea,
The blue, the free, the ever free."

How perfectly the ocean poet has expressed the feeling which comes over the soul, when first we look abroad, and see only "the blue above and the blue below," with what seems then only a trail bark to bear us safely on. When the exhilaration has subsided, there comes a strange sensation of loneliness, of danger, too, in the perfect isolation which we realize, from all the world beside.

We had a strange experience also in not seeing for seven days a single ship—in not being permitted to rest our eyes upon a solitary sail. There are thousands and tens of thousands dancing on the waves, yet here we are alone.

We should not be guilty of telling the oft-told tale of "life at sea," had we not found it so entirely different from anything we have read by the voyagers who have gone before us. We were prepared for tedium, for sea sickness, for discomfort for unpalatable food and all manner of disagreeabilities, which would be developed in captain, sailors and fellow passengers, and in all were utterly disappointed. We were told indeed by those who had crossed the sea twenty times, that we might do so as many, and not again be so highly favored, but we are so far blessed that we shall look [illegible] anticipations to a second voyage, [illegible] we are preparing for joy and not [illegible] the day of returning comes, if only we can sure that the Hermann is to be our Ocean Home manned by those who now guide it o'er a trackless way, yet a way which seems to them as familiar and well defined as to us did ever a village street.

A knowledge of navigation was never at all among our accomplishments, and it has been, therefore, with infinite wonder that we have seen how safe and sure "vessels are guided from port to port." We did not become learned in the science in one fortnight, but we asked questions and treasured up knowledge with a zeal and interest which never for a moment wearied, but it was to wonder more, rather than less, at the marvelous revelations of science, and the facility with which man use it for all the purposes of life. It is no slight accomplishment to know "every rope in the ship," which every sailor must, and to know, as its officers must, the sun, moon and stars in their courses—to measure the distances of the planets as correctly as the husbandman does from tree to tree in his fields—to tell afar off when the storm is coming, or the wind rising, when there is danger from cold and from heat, and to be able perfectly to provide for all these emergencies, requires genius and capacity which, indeed, are not unheeded, but which are not sufficiently appreciated, even by those who profit by them. Every day we were permitted to trace upon the chart the ship's course, and to work its variation for every preceding course for five years; every night we were told how many miles we had come. Every hour we saw the thermometer let down into the waves to ascertain the temperature of the water, in order to be sure we were in no danger of the formidable icebergs, and as often we saw the mysterious little triangle thrown over which sailors call heaving the log, to prove our speed. There are 120 men, each with his appointed duty, and each with his duty well performed, yet in 16 days we did not hear a single command given on board our ship. No well-ordered household could be conducted more quietly, no table could be managed with more taste and neatness, and in no first-class hotel have we seen servants glide about so noiselessly, or execute so promptly. Indeed, not from a single officer, man or servant, have we heard a loud word during all our voyage. By some magic telegraph communications come and go instantaneously, and without any parade of discipline, or any servile obedience, everything is done. "How different is all this from my idea of a ship," say I to a fellow-passenger. "Yes, and it is quite different from most ships," he replies. "If you had come on the A or the B, there would have been a perfect din and pow-wow all the time. But our Captain was a naval officer, and educated on a man-of-war. Besides that, he is a high-toned and chivalrous gentleman, such as we do not often find on land. All this order and neatness are in accordance with his taste, which would be offended as much as ours by dirt and confusion, and we hope the time will come when ship-owners will believe that, though a regular rough old tar may navigate a ship, he is not the best fitted to command one—that it is possible to unite the gentleman and the sailor, and thus equally secure the safety and comfort of passengers." Our deck would never soil a satin slipper, and we rose one morning in season to learn how all this brasswork is kept shining, like a lady's tea-set.

We had nothing which our officers dignified by the name of storm, though I had hoped to see one grand war among the elements. But we had a "light breeze," in sailor phrase, from which I could imagine the grandeur of a more serious warfare. With what excitement we watched the foam-crested billows, dashing and breaking against the vessel's side, while not a shadow of fear came over us! Every motion of a ship, in sunshine or in shower, is grace. In the quiet moonlight, when scarcely a ripple disturbs the surface of the sea and the sails fill gently to the breeze—when tossed like a toy upon waves that roll over it in merciless fury—it is alike beautiful. We do not wonder that sailors so love their ship, and sing, as we have often heard them,

"A life on the ocean wave,
A home on the rolling deep,
Where the scattered waters rave,
And the winds their revels keep."

We see now how it is, that they are free, and brave, and generous, far beyond us who plod heavily upon the land. How entirely separate are all their associations from those who till the earth, and work in handicrafts! They have a different language, too. There are at least two thousand nautical phrases, which sailors must have at their tongues' end, and of which no landsman ever heard, and our dictionaries entirely ignore. We had heard of foremast, mainmast and mizzenmast; but beside these there are twelve others, each supported by stays, tackles, shrouds, according to its position. From hull to stem and stem to stern, there is a name for every foot of wood and every inch of rigging, and as we watched it playing like an Æolian in the wind, we almost believed its peculiar tracery was for beauty; for we could not conceive a use for its thousand strings, and especially, if necessary, how they could be kept in tune so long. The quiet discipline of our ship, perhaps, detracted a little from what we had considered the poetry of sea-life. We did not hear the "boatswain's whistle" nor "all hands a-hoy," but we saw the "masts come down," the "sails furled," and the flags and pennants spread to the wind. Every waking hour was one of interest, as that, "Land ahead!" was scarcely a welcome sound, especially as it was a strange land which we were approaching.

The ninth day we, for the first time, saw a sail, [illegible] the seventh day [illegible] up in the distance, and [illegible] they were distinctly visible, and [illegible] "frozen North." Grand and fearful as they are, they must be beautiful in the sunlight, but the sun did not illumine them for our benefit.

Weeks and weeks have fled as the sound of the steam whistle and the paddle wheel, and not a solitary sail, did we see in the great house of the finny tribe; and we learned for the first time that we are not in future to be so much indebted to those monsters of the deep. Some enterprising Yankee has proved that coal will furnish oil, wax and naptha, as well as fuel, in great abundance, and at less expense than all animals and other materials put together. We understood the necessity when we stood for hours in the engine room, and saw how often those passionless wheels and shafts, and any part exposed to friction, must be lubricated. And multiplying as any kind of machinery is, all the whales of the sea could not furnish the necessary supply. The oil from coal is free from the glue which in other oils soon becomes a cause of friction, and in lamps, of destruction. The same amount will burn longer and clearer—the same quantity, therefore, performing a third more service. Agencies have already been established for furnishing the steamers of Europe, and for the introduction of it into all factories, and wherever machinery is used.

Among the seven wonders of the world are these ocean steamers. We think it is a great trouble to put in a cellar for the Winter forty tons of coal, and here are shoveled into these great furnaces forty-two tons every day! making about 900 tons a trip, and the engine, kept in motion at such an expense, cost originally $400,000, and the ship without it as much more. To furnish the table merely costs every time across the Atlantic $4,000. What monstrous profits must be made on "mutton, sugar, tea and rum" to warrant such investments.

"England! we are in sight of England!" These words thrill every American as no others can, and as we thread our way through the channel a thousand objects seem almost familiar to our eyes, so long have they been familiar to our ears, through the channels almost as old of history and romance. It is dark when we pass the Isle of Wight, and yet we strain our eyes to get one glimpse of its legend-covered coast, and in the midst of a cold storm we neared the bold cliffs of Dover, yet braved it willingly to view the scene which description alone could impress deeply on our memory. Yet, a storm was a [illegible] than the sunshine for such a picture, and we could almost fancy we heard in the moaning wind among the shrouds the wailings of King LEAR, and the breaking one by one of his shriveled heartstrings. May there be few to say so bitterly "Oh, hate sharper than a serpent's tooth is it, to have a thankless child." But we do feel a little anxious to know what is going on in the present world, and all day look earnestly for the little pilot-boat which will bring us news of the

"The City's din and the busy hum of men."

Ah, there it is. What a speck is the little boat upon the great sea! how intently we watch it as near and more near it comes, and tremble lest an unguarded motion of the great steamer should crush it to atoms. Can it be possible a man can climb these steep and slippery stairs? It is nothing for a pilot; he springs like a squirrel, and is in a moment safe on deck. Now for the papers—alas! they are exactly the date of our leaving New-York. This is not Yankee land, and English pilots have no idea of the value of the "morning papers." The DAILY TIMES will publish this very day in New-York, what we are reading off the coast of England. But the pilot knows how to guide us safely through "the Needles," and "the Straits," and moor us safely at Bremerhaven, and for this we thank him, and excuse him that he does not appreciate this day's London Times or our desire to hear from the New World.

Here we are, in no more danger of "perils by sea," but in not less terror of "perils by land." Some are glad, because they are "going home;" others are weeping because the last link is broken which connects them with country and kindred, but in mournful accents all will say farewell to Captain, ship and crew, to whom each tongue accords the nonpareil our pen has written.

Farewell! We hope when next we cross the sea
To brave the deep and greet our native land with less.

KANSAS.

The Southern Guest upon Gov. Walker—Sickleman Bergundent.

Hon. LAWRENCE M. KEITT, late the colleague of PRESTON S. BROOKS, writes a letter to the Richmond Enquirer, to defend himself against the charge of hostility to the Administration. He denounces the course of Gov. WALKER in Kansas in unmeasured terms:

"The object of Gov. WALKER in referring the Constitution back to the vote of all who may be in Kansas at the time of the reference, is obvious enough. The Convention framed a Constitution for Kansas, as Kansas is at the time. Those who subsequently go to Kansas go (here as they would go into any other State of the Union. They must obey the laws, and if they do not like them, they must change them in the mode prescribed. The Convention embodies the sovereignty of Kansas, and that covers all who are in the Territory; and it is immaterial whether they came there when the delegates to the Convention were elected, or whether they came afterward. They are just as much represented in the Constitution of Kansas as they would be in that of any State in the Union into which they came after the adoption of its Constitution. The reference of the Constitution back to the popular vote is I hold, uncalled for. But its reference to any other than the qualified voters is debauchery. They were the only agency competent to organize the State, and they are the only political element known in the act of organizing it. Until the organization is complete and settled, they are the only source of power. To make it otherwise is to make a Constitution as fickle and mutable as mere statute. It is, in fact, to have no organic act or law. If those who come upon the soil, in the interval between the election of delegates to a Convention and the framing of the Constitution, have a right to satisfy or reject that instrument, why shall not those who come in the next year, or the year after, have the same right? They will be equally subject to its provisions, and this great right should no more be denied to them than to the others. This theory unsettles society and degrades all fundamental law. It is the offspring of French and Northern society; not of English or Southern society. It belongs to a turbulent society, where the wholesome restraints of law are impaired, without the development of individuality. And in France it culminated in a revolution to divide property, and struggled on until it was pressed back into the gutter by the bayonet.

Governor WALKER can only urge the right of the intermediate settlers in Kansas in order to make Kansas a Free-Soil State. I will not believe Mr. BUCHANAN an accomplice in this policy without sufficient proof. If there be any complicity, however, my denunciations will be more the less earnest. The resolutions of the Democratic Party of Georgia, in Convention at Milledgeville, a few days ago, on the Kansas policy of Governor WALKER, express my own views clearly enough. The Administration should resolve itself from WALKER's treachery. It will do so, I am sure, unless it means to be responsible for it."

A public meeting has been held in Montgomery, Ala., to denounce Governor WALKER. Judge MARTIN presided, and a series of violent resolutions was adopted—the following sentiments being assigned:

1. That instead of leaving "the people of that Territory free from all foreign interference to decide their own destiny for themselves," he, as the Executive, has brought his official influence to bear upon their deliberations, first as voters and then as delegates in Convention, to induce them to frame a Free-Soil Constitution, and to submit whatever constitution is framed "for ratification or rejection by a majority of the then actual bona fide resident settlers of Kansas."

2. That, as Governor of the Territory, he has improperly attempted to influence, first the voters, then the delegates, to submit such Constitution as they may form to the settlers for ratification or rejection by announcing to them what he alleges to be the opinion of the Federal Executive in favor of that policy.

3. That, as Governor of the Territory, he had deserted to intimidate the voters and influence the Convention into an adoption of his views against the Constitution, in an address of a bitter character, in which he announces to the people of Kansas, in substance, that "in no case (legally) will Congress admit Kansas as a slave State" [illegible]

[illegible]

Some suppose, that if a Slavery Constitution is formed in Kansas, that it will hereafter be submitted to the people for adoption, and that it will then be in their power for to vote it down. Such persons seem to suppose that the election upon the question of the Constitution will be more fairly conducted than that for the election of delegates; but I confess I have no faith in believing that there will be any difference in the same parties, with the same motives, between voters and the general of the election, and if they submit the Constitution to a vote it will not be in the form of a fair question, but it will be presented to the people with their own hands for difficulty in the way of their usurpation when once established. Suppose, for example, that a Slavery Constitution should be made, that I can conceive to be the most plausible way which their usurpation could adopt to give power to the Slavery party, and what is the way which their usurpation would adopt? Of Mormon officers, Mr. TRUMBULL said:

To show the working of this great principle of Popular Sovereignty, I beg leave to read an extract from the proclamation of the President of the Mormon Church, in which, speaking of the Constitution, in the phrase of "the forty million of barbarians," they declare that:

"The Democratic Convention in Cincinnati, composed of some Representatives from every State, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Congress has no power, under the Constitution, to impair or destroy the property of citizens of the several States, and that it is the duty of the sole and proper judges, of everything relating to their own affairs, not some forty million of barbarians.

This is the language of the President of the Mormon Church, they have attempted to Mormonize or rule in the Territory of Utah, and they want to be the judges of the propriety of the Democratic Party

A Proposition for the Public Health.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Tribune:

There who are acquainted with our Dispensary system, and the operations of the visiting physicians attached to them, not seeing that in their visits from house to house they frequently meet poor of fifth and sixth story tenements suffering of other members of the same family, or of apprentices, spread away from tenement to attic, arising from imperfect drainage, or the indolence of the tenants, which to a great degree prevents the efforts to relieve the sick. They find rooms filled with the sick, and saturated with poisonous effluvia from these causes, so that occupants in almost every room are prostrate with disease ingendered thereby. Small-pox, scarlet and other fevers have free course with their victims, and go out from these pest-houses to infect the neighborhood. The physicians may prescribe palliatives, but be is powerless to remove the original cause. That it may be seen we do not overdate this danger, we give a short extract from a late report of a visiting physician, who, in one of the wards of the City, whose left hand covers the princely mansions of the rich, while the right embraces a district filled with these tenements, he had before specified to the Board particular localities as nuisances. Referring to the epidemic which visited the City last season, he says:

"It is a source of sincere thankfulness that under the dispensation of Providence we were not subjected to the desolating influence of the pestilence which threatened our city during the last summer and autumn; had the infection been transported to particular localities in our district, the extent of suffering and loss of life would have been immeasurable. In these localities the negative bodies, necessary to the propagation of the disease, existed in abundance, and the mere application of the positive element would have produced such a shock as New-York would not recover from for years. It has been universally observed, that wherever epidemics have prevailed they have first attacked those who are broken down in health, the intemperate, and the inhabitants of low, filthy, crowded and badly ventilated apartments; such material as this largely abounds in our City."

It is not the physician can report a house as a nuisance to the Health Warden, the Health Warden to the City Inspector, the City Inspector order somebody else to attend to it; but by the time the order is run through, and somebody is ready to act, the mischief, which might have been avoided by prompt action, is done. The physician's time will not allow him to hunt up the party that it will be necessary to find, to ascertain whether anything can be accomplished, or if he does, he may be a good mechanic, but knows nothing of medical hygiene, and therefore may not appreciate the danger.

There is, we think, a way to remedy this. Make the visiting Physicians, ex officio, Health Wardens for their respective districts, with full police powers to compel the tenants or landlords to abate and remove those causes of local distemper. The physicians may use the request this to be done now, but they lack the power to enforce their requests; they become discouraged and at times feel as if their toilsome labors to relieve the sick poor were almost wasted.

The only objection we have heard to giving them this power is, on the one side, that it would make the physicians dependent on City officials, which many consider degrading a and on the other side, if they were not amenable to "the powers that be" they would be irresponsible, and there would be no check on their abuse of power. Both of these arguments we consider of little weight, or such as can easily be overcome. It is not proposed that they shall many any responsible the present Health Wardens in connection with their duties and pay; and we believe that if any visiting physician should so far forget his obligations to the dispensary which appointed him as to abuse the power vested in him consequent on his appointment, he would speedily be removed, and his ex officio powers would at once cease. Besides, he would be liable to prosecution for any excess.

Steps to effect some arrangement of this character would long since have been taken by the managers of the Dispensaries, had it not been for their aversion to bringing the officers of these Institutions in any way under political control. And no plan could meet this opposition, or that of the Physicians, that should permit political motives to influence in the matter. The object is not political power, but public security. It must be well known that the visiting physicians are be first to be aware of the prevalence of contagious diseases or local epidemics; and are, necessarily, from their education and position, the most competent persons that citizens have to protect them from the spread of a pestilence.

While, while the families of the better classes are retiring in fancied security, and congratulating themselves on the health of the City, the self-denying physicians is laboring unknown and unrewarded by them) a few blocks distant, to check the spread of a disease they otherwise might decimate their homes. Give them all the tools they require for success in their benevolent work. C. C. B.

Captain Davis' Instructions.

The National Intelligencer says: "Since the publication of Capt. Davis' instructions by the Department the public has become curious to know what was contained in the letter from Commodore Martin and quoted by Captain Davis in his official dispatch. The following is all of that letter which relates to Walker and Mesenger":

U. S. Flag-Ship Independence,
Bay of Panama, Jan. 10, 1857.

Sir: You will prepare the U. S. ship St. Marys, under your command, for sea with all practicable dispatch, and when ready proceed to San Juan del Sur, Nicaragua, where the presence of a man-of-war is necessary in consequence of the unsettled state of public affairs.

The numerous and scattered condition of the forces under Gen. Walker may induce him to attempt expeditions upon American citizens in that State, which you will prevent and restrain.

In the event of the expulsion of Walker and his forces from Mesenger by the allied armies, and his departure to adjacent territory in Central America for the purpose of hostile and aggressive operations, you will take such further measures with the force under your command as circumstances shall require for the adequate protection of American citizens.

[illegible] THE DAY.

[illegible] Governor MARCY appears to have [illegible] by [illegible] Albany on [illegible] visited Albany on [illegible] apparently in excellent [illegible] spirits. It was only within a [illegible] days that he became conscious [illegible] of the heart, and the symptoms of [illegible] have been such as to occasion alarm [illegible] friends.

[illegible] correspondent, writing on board the [illegible] Niagara, sends us some interesting particulars concerning the progress of the Atlantic Telegraph enterprise. On the 26th of [illegible] the attractions to the Niagara were [illegible] and on the same day she left for Liverpool, where she arrived on Monday the 6th. Every [illegible] which I have hitherto received [illegible] the Niagara, being able to receive [illegible] short and before, will, it is [illegible] take it in more speedily than her consort [illegible].

[illegible] correspondent, in a letter published in this morning's Inquirer, gives an interesting account of the elections in France, and the way they are conducted under Imperial surveillance. Of the late elections, it is known that out of the [illegible] deputies of Paris, seven government candidates were successful, and though three opposition candidates had a greater number of votes than their adversaries, it was uncertain whether they had an absolute majority sufficient to secure their election.

The steamer Illinois left this port at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon for Aspinwall, with four hundred passengers and a large quantity of freight. Among the passengers was Hon. Wm. E. Venable, of North Carolina, recently appointed U. S. Minister, resident near the Government of Guatemala, who is on his way to his post viâ the Isthmus. We understand that he has been instructed to enlist the good offices of the Government of Guatemala in favor of an early reopening of the Nicaraguan Transit Route.

The feeling in the South against the course adopted by Gov. WALKER in Kansas grows more bitter. A public meeting has been held in Montgomery, Ala., at which violent resolutions, denunciatory of the Governor, were adopted, and inflammatory speeches made. LAWRENCE M. KEITT, of South Carolina, late the colleague of PRESTON S. BROOKS, has published a letter in which Gov. WALKER is abused without stint.

DAVID R. ATCHISON, of Kansas notoriety, has written a letter to friends in South Carolina, virtually abandoning the field. He says it is evident the South is no match for the North in Kansas, and that the latter contributes ten dollars where the former gives one for the support of its cause.

It has remained for the present generation to witness the practical demonstration of the fact that Niagara River is navigable for steamers from the city of Buffalo to the village of Niagara Falls, and yesterday navigation was formally opened between the two places, with ceremonies appropriate to the occasion. Three steamers, loaded with people, ascended the distance from the Great Hydraulic Canal in Buffalo, and were received by an immense concourse of people, with cheering and the firing of cannon.

The cause of Rev. Dr. ROSS and his supporters in seceding from the New School Assembly at Cleveland, meets the marked disapprobation of the majority of the Presbyterian Church in the South. The Southern Presbyterian, published at Charleston, as the organ of the Church in the South, has a sharp article on Dr. ROSS, declining to accept his leadership.

Another awful poisoning case has occurred in Massachusetts. The entire family of Mr. JOHN IRESON, living at Randolph, were made very sick with arsenic, but by the intervention of prompt measures of relief their lives were saved. Miss LUCINDA ANN HUNT, 22 years of age, was arrested on the charge of administering the poison.

The Mayor sent a message to the Board of Aldermen last evening, stating that "one of the atrocious laws" passed by the late Legislature had been declared constitutional, and calling upon the Member of the State for sympathy. Ten thousand copies were ordered to be printed. He also sent a communication in favor of a time and weather observatory on the Battery. Resolutions were offered in favor of putting the property of the old Police Department into the hands of the new Commissioners, for their use. They were debated at length, and finally referred to a Committee to report on Wednesday evening. A resolution empowering the Mayor to send some one to invite those having control of the Great Eastern to make this her first destination, and appropriating $2,500 to defray expenses, was offered and postponed for four days. Mr. CHARLES DEVELIN, the Street Commissioner, sent in two appointments of Surveyors, which were confirmed, and then the Board adjourned to 5 o'clock this evening.

A large amount of business was transacted by the Board of Councilmen on Monday. The death of the late Secretary of State was noted in an official and becoming manner. A resolution was adopted authorizing the Clerk of the Chief of Police to retain the property of the City, and referred to the Committee on Police. Another resolution as to the payment of the disbanded Police was also referred. The propriety of the erection of a foundling house was referred to the Committee on Almshouses. Upon the question of transferring the police stations to the Metropolitan Police there was an animated debate. The question will be reported upon on Wednesday. The Board divided on the question of adjournment very repeatedly in order to defeat the effort of Mr. HOWLAND's friends to bring up the final passage of the bill increasing his salary as Chief Engineer. Ultimately the measure was adopted by 32 to 12, after 4½ hours session and 20 divisions.

After the surprise with which citizens read the news that terrible riots had been raging Saturday and Sunday in the 6th, 7th and 13th Wards, of course they could talk of nothing else. But there was nothing occurring throughout the day to heighten the excitement. No military were in sight nor did the late battle ground present any unusual appearance. Two of the wounded at the Sunday riot died at the New York Hospital yesterday—WM. BUCKLEY, a boy, and THOS. C. SMITH, making the number of the dead eight in all. The rest of the wounded do moderately well. CORONER CONNERY held inquests upon two of the killed—CAHILL and PETTONEY—in neither case was any evidence elicited to fasten the guilt upon the persons by whom the fatal shots were fired. A jury was impanneled by the same Coroner, to examine into the cause of the death of WM. BUCKLEY, a boy about 13 years of age, who died at the Hospital at 10 o'clock yesterday forenoon. CORONER PERRY began an inquest at Bellevue Hospital upon three others of the dead, but adjourned it over. The cannon captured in Bayard street, Saturday night, is yet at the arsenal. It has been ascertained that it was stolen from the blacksmith's shop of a man named WALKER, who had just repaired it. The row on the line of the Second-avenue railroad on Sunday evening was not, as had at first reported, though fifty conductors and one driver were badly thrashed by the crowds who drove them from the [illegible]

[illegible] Police Commissioners and referred it to the Police Committee. The same that, some time ago, they refused to hear read.

The following notice comes to us from E. E. MCCONNELL, Chairman of the Committee. The display of fireworks which was postponed in consequence of the unfavorable state of the weather will take place on Tuesday Evening, July 7, weather permitting, or on the first fair evening thereafter.

There was very little work done in the way of cleaning streets last week, the rain preventing it. The returns at the City Inspector's Office show that 8,774 loads of ashes, garbage, and dirt, were removed, of which only 4,874 was street-dirt and manure. A demonstration was made, yesterday, on the thick mud in Beekman-street, and REYNOLDS' carts carried it away. From Nassau down to Cliff-street the cobble-stones shine as they have not for months before.

The expense of providing new Station-Houses for the police in this City is estimated at $400,000. The Commissioners, however, express no fears of being obliged to saddle the City with this enormous expense.

There was a great crowd at Mr. BEECHER's Church on Sunday evening. The reverend gentleman denounced the corruption, profligacy and selfishness of the executive Government of New-York in severe terms. Into emigrant runners, sailors' boarding housekeepers and the Christian hypocrites, who tolerated such villains, he threw hot shot. Mayor WOOD (though not by name) and officials of his sort he eloquently exposed. The Commissioners of Emigration he handsomely complimented. Our full report, though minute, lacking Mr. BEECHER's manner, would do the speaker injustice, so we do not print it.

The Court of General Sessions opened for the July term yesterday. JOHN STIEFEL, a German, was convicted of assault and battery. He wounded MARGARET SENTFIELD with a knife, on the 20th of May last, at No. 82 Houston-street. Sentence was deferred. THEHLOR RATHMAN, also a German, was convicted on a charge of robbing the store of MORRIS STOLZ, No. 24 Atlantic-street, Brooklyn, of a quantity of wearing apparel, which was found at his boarding-house in Reade-street, in this City. Sentence deferred. Judge ROSWELL occupies the bench this term, and to-day he will deliver a charge to the Grand Jury, which will obtain considerable attention. It will be Judge ROSWELL's greatest literary effort, and will possibly demand a special notice.

E. L. SNOW, a dry goods dealer, doing business at the corner of Grand and Elizabeth streets, was arrested here the other day by Messrs. BOWYER and TASLEY, Independent Policeman, and sent on to Philadelphia, where he stands charged with receiving a large amount of goods stolen from that city.

Hook and Ladder Company No. 12, JAMES A. CAROLIN, Foreman, turned out last evening, with Moseghan's Band, to receive New-York Hose Company No. 29, who have been on a visit to Albany. They arrived by the cars, with their machine, and were escorted to their quarters.

The bodies of two unknown men were found in the East River yesterday. One appeared to have been that of a person 25, and the other 50 years of age. Inquests were held, and verdicts of "Death from Drowning" rendered.

The Brooklyn Common Council did itself yesterday the decent justice to reconsider the vote of permission to rebuild the cow stables which a kind Providence relieved the Seventh Ward of by fire lately, and referred the matter to the Board of Health. Alderman SCHOLTZ made some statements concerning this horrible old nuisance that commend themselves to all the people of Brooklyn. It is an outrage for the Common Council to make an exception from the existing law for the purpose of reconstructing so obvious a centre for disease and everything disgusting. We trust the Board of Health will redeem its reputation by prompt action in this matter.

COST OF THE NEW POLICE.—Now that the Metropolitan Police bill has been pronounced constitutional by the Court of Appeals, it is the duty of every citizen not only to obey the law implicitly, but to endeavor to make it as little burdensome as possible to the City.

The law is a very good one, with the exception of a few clerical errors, which occurred probably in the engrossing. It is very comprehensive in its provisions, and among other admirable features is peculiarly considerate to the employes under it. The families of those who lose their lives, or become disabled, in the faithful performance of their duty as policemen, are to be generously provided for. In this respect even many enemies of the act from partisan or other motives, are loud in its praise.

But this humane provision must necessarily become a source of great expense,—a large additional burden on the tax-payer, poor man! who is the last person, in these matters, generally thought of or consulted. Also, he will have to foot the "little bill" for expenses attending the organization and equipment of the force, and last, but by no means least, of providing station-houses.

Mayor WOOD in "General Order, No. 775," destined to be memorable in Municipal history, directs his captains to remain in charge of the Station-houses, up to July 3 in use by the old force, and of all other its "Police property." As City property, we suppose it is his purpose to exclude the new Police from the use of it.

Without questioning, just now, the right thus to divert from its appropriate uses the Police Station-houses and property of the City, what end, we would ask, does such a course answer—what purpose does it accomplish except the gratification of mere malignant spite? Who suffers in consequence? Not the Metropolitan Police. The Act allows the Commissioners to procure anew, if necessary, all suitable accommodations for the force under their charge.

Upon whom, then, does the burden fall of this eccentric action on the part of our Mayor? There is but one answer. It falls on the taxpayer. He not only provides new uniforms, equipments, clubs, and munitions, for the Metropolitan Police, but pays also for laying up in ordinary and protecting the immensely valuable property of the City, precisely adapted for the very same purpose.

We have always supposed that a Mayor and "City Fathers" are provided for public, not private, ends and purposes, but it seems we are under a mistake. These high functionaries have no constituents worth speaking of. The object of the ruling faction in the Common Council appears to be to do as much injury as possible to the City, and to increase to the utmost the cost of organizing the new Police. Perhaps Mr. WOOD and Alderman WILSON think this will be excessively annoying to Messrs. DRAPER, NYE and CHOLWELL; but the special friends of the Mayor, Messrs. ASTON, BROWN, &c., who are among our largest tax payers, may think it is paying very dearly for their whistle to feed Mayor WOOD's grudges at so costly a rate.

Mobocracy.

There is certainly a moral of some sort to be deduced from all great disturbances, riots and émeutes. Hardly one occurs in any part of the world which does not convey a lesson to somebody. Very few people are supplied with as many lessons of the sort as we are. We have riots and disturbances of all sorts, grievous and disgraceful enough in their way. The only consolation we have in recording or commenting upon them lies in the fact, that, probably, in no part of the world are riots so little significative of the state or feelings of the community at large—so entirely local both in their causes and in their results. An English riot implies, as a general rule, great and widespread suffering or discontent—so acute, that the restraints of a strong Government and well-knit aristocracy are insufficient to prevent its boiling over. A French émeute is either the herald of revolution, or the attempt of hordes of fanatics to break up the frame-work of society, and imposes upon the nation, per fas aut nefas, the wildest "crazes" which the wildest imaginations can conceive. When barricades are erected in the Rue St. Antoine, the world knows that the Government pro tem. is resting on an unsteady basis, and that a large portion of the French people is desirous of change. It is hardly necessary to speak of the full force of disturbances in any other European country. In all despotisms, popular outbreak implies not simply the existence of deep-seated discontent, but that the malcontents were growing too strong for their tyrants. It is at once the price and privilege of freedom to indorse turbulence and disorder with impunity. No Frenchman ever crosses the Channel and witnesses the tumult by which an English election is marked without feeling convinced that the Empire is tottering to its fall. No foreigner, we are fully persuaded, ever reads the accounts of riots and bloodshed by which the columns of our own journals are so frequently disgraced, without arriving at the conclusion that all security, both for life and property, is at an end within the limits of this Republic. One must be on the spot and have some insight, however small, into the genius of our institutions, and some dexterity, however slight, with the instincts of the people, to know how little the whole body politic is affected by what are, after all, but scratches on the surface, which a thorn might inflict, or a day might heal.

We desire to guard ourselves expressly in making these remarks, against the imputation of being the apologists of such scandals as those by which our City was disgraced on Saturday and Sunday nights last. There is no way in which armed conflicts between bands of ruffians in our streets in broad noonday can be made to wear any aspect but a discreditable one. But we do wish to have the world know that in all this, so far from buying our freedom too dearly, we could bear twice the amount of rowdyism by which we are at present afflicted, without wishing to sacrifice one jot or tittle of this rude license, in return for the chains, the bayonets, the clean streets and trained police of a "strong government."

We commenced this article by asking if there was nothing to be learned even from these light afflictions; if the police or the citizens can be made no wiser by what occurred on the evening of the Fourth? The only deduction from the rueful premises which the Commissioners seem to have made as yet, is that all grogshops ought to be closed on Sunday. Now we most cordially agree with them regarding the evil worked by leaving drinking saloons open and at hand on that day of the week, when the mass of the poor are most idle and have most money. The authorities undoubtedly do a good work in removing, as far as they can, that species of temptation which doubtless led in the first instance to the recent bloodshed, and supplied fuel after the flame was kindled. But they, as well as the public, would do well to remember that we have not discharged our whole duty towards these men, in depriving them of their only mode of gratification.

The wretched "Dead Rabbits," and "Atlantic Guards," et hoc genus omne, poor, ignorant, depraved scoundrels, as they evidently are, are entitled to something more at the hands of the State than a scarcity of whisky, and volleys of musketry. They have grown up, or assembled in our midst, whether with our sanction or without our sanction matters not, with strong passions, abundant animal spirits, and an intense craving for excitement. These are all things which, properly regulated, may be turned to the advantage and not to the detriment of the community. These men need excitement as much as any of us. The gratification which their wild, untrained natures find in strong drink and street-fights, richer and more fortunate men find in the theatre, in hunting, in music, painting, reading and the society of friends, in travel and in the whirl of commerce and of the forum. In shutting up the lager-bier saloon upon the "Dead Rabbit," and shooting him down when he gets up a row in the streets, we virtually consign him to a life of hopeless, unvaried toil, in a narrow den in a vile alley. To be sure, he has books and newspapers within reach, and the money spent in pistols and ammunition, we shall doubtless be told, might be spent, if he pleased, in country rides. We admit all this, but we must remind objectors that moral and aesthetic tastes need training just as well as the physical palate, and you can no more expect a rowdy to turn at one jump from street-fights to the quiet enjoyments of quiet life and scholars, than the practiced epicure can to turn with gusto to Johannisberg or Sauterne. There is plenty of extraordinary work to be done here, and the sooner it is done the better, for these bands of ruffians are being, each year, recruited by boys, whom a little effort might make ornaments instead of plagues to the City.

The Overland Mail.

The contract for carrying the United States Mail between the Mississippi River and San Francisco, was awarded last week, as has already been announced, to BUTTERFIELD, DIXSMORE, FARGO & Co. Personally, we are unacquainted with either of these parties; but they are well known to the public as experienced, energetic and enterprising Expressmen, who will be likely to secure the very best service possible over the route selected. In the selection of contractors the President has done well, evincing a wise regard for the public interest. We do not doubt that he has, from the beginning, desired and designed to pursue, in this connection, precisely the course which would most surely redound to the public good. And here let us take opportunity to repudiate the interpretation of our former articles on this subject adopted by certain Democratic cotemporaries. We have never charged the President or his Cabinet with any corrupt or venal disposition in connection with this mail contract,—and any such supposition was entirely gratuitous and unwarranted. The law authorizing the overland mail service, reposed a wide discretion in the hands of the Administration. The Postmaster-General, with the President's approbation, had the right to award the contract to whomsoever he chose, and to select the route which seemed to him best,—and that without paying the least regard to the character of the bids put in by parties desiring to perform the service. The case differed in this respect from that of ordinary mail-lettings, where the law requires that the contracts should be given to the lowest bidder, &c.

Bearing these facts in mind, it will be seen that we charged no corruption when we expressed our belief that, despite the bidding, it had been determined to award the contract to Mr. BURCH, of California, viâ the Southern route. Nor did we intimate that any venal motive had prompted or controlled that determination. Mr. BURCH is a gentleman of large capital, much experience, and more competent, perhaps, than any other single man in the United States to execute this great mail contract. He had influential friends, too, who urged him upon the Postmaster-General: and we repeat to-day,—and Mr. BURCH will not deny it,—that he had reason to believe three months ago that he would certainly get the contract—that it was as well settled in his favor, almost, as though the Cabinet had formally decided it. We repeat that it was the Postmaster-General's determination to give it to him down to a very recent period,—a fact which a report of the Cabinet discussions on the subject would make quite apparent. We do not say that he came to this determination believing at the same time that he was sacrificing the public interest to his private wishes. We have not questioned his conviction that the Southern route is the best of all. What we have questioned was the judgment which decides in favor of that route,—believing that practically it does sacrifice the public good, is unjust to a large portion of the Union, and perverts to sectional purposes what Congress intended should be national. Those who insist that an administration can do nothing unwise except from corrupt motives, must bear the responsibility of any such reflections upon the President in anything we have published on the subject in hand.

So much for our position. The President has overruled the determination to give the contract to Mr. BURCH. In the matter of selection of a route, however, the South has triumphed. The contract awarded provides two termini on the Mississippi,—Memphis and St. Louis. Starting from these points, the two mail trains will form a junction at Little Rock, Arkansas, and thence proceed to the Rio Grande, Fort Fillmore or Dona Anna, and Fort Yuma, and enter California at its extreme Southern corner. The great desert, of which we have heretofore spoken, is crossed by this route, but it is designed to supply water there by digging Artesian Wells, for which also Congress recently made an appropriation.

The selection of St. Louis as one of the starting points will probably quiet, to some extent, the tempest of popular feeling in the West against the selection of the Southern route; but a little experience in the operation of the contract will assuredly draw upon it popular condemnation. The route thus selected does not run through a country susceptible of early settlement, nor is it one which overland emigrant trains can pursue to advantage. The very fact that it requires Artesian wells to supply it with water is sufficient evidence in support of both these propositions. These objections, we believe, should have settled the question against that route. Besides, the latter is longer than the Central, along the line of which numerous settlements already exist, which would have become healthy and prosperous had the mail route passed through them, and, in return for the advantages thus conferred upon them, would have furnished abundant protection to the mails, and supplies for both travelers and stock.

This is the route, too, already selected by hundreds of thousands of emigrants, after years of experience, while nobody pretends that an emigrant-train ever passed over the now-selected mail route. The people of California have already condemned the Southern route, for the reasons thus suggested, and also because it enters their State in its least populous part. Time, we fear, will vindicate these objections, and show that, however honest the President may be, his decision is an unfortunate one. If so, Congress will have the power to provide a remedy; but, if our views prove erroneous, we shall be among the first to rejoice that our forebodings have proved unfounded.

WHAT ENGLISHMEN CAN'T DO.—The London Times says:

"We are confessedly the worst hands at a spectacle in the world. For State ceremonies, pageants and shows of all kinds we have lost the simplicity of nature without acquiring the ingenuity of art. Even when we do by accident stumble into something pretty, picturesque and popular, something that tells its own tale and is pleasantly remembered, the authors of the unwonted success seem ashamed of their own achievement, and are anxious not to repeat it."

If our cotemporary across the Atlantic [illegible] by "we" [illegible] of being the worst hands in the world at a spectacle, we shall feel called upon to discuss the justice of her protestation. But as they may be in London at getting up a show, we do not believe they are half so bad as we are here. Any unprejudiced mind that reads the account of our last Fourth of July celebration in this City will have to confess that in point of confusion, irregularity, and the general absence of anything like order and methodic design, nothing could be worse. Putting out of the question all the rows and riots which took place for want of efficient police arrangements, the streets were in the wrenchedest condition possible for a public parade, and the military who were out in their gorgeous uniforms had marched but a very short distance before they were bemoaned with fish up to their knees, and, in this plight they had to pass in review before the Governor of the State and the Mayor of the City.

MAYOR WOOD'S LAST MESSAGE.—Issuing proclamations is one of Mayor WOOD's weaknesses, and, like most men who have a weakness, he evidently imagines it to be one of his strong points. He prides himself upon his compositions it is very clear, and he has already issued enough to make a very considerable volume. The messages of WASHINGTON during his eight years in the Presidency, do not equal in bulk the messages of Mayor WOOD. We did not suppose that he would let slip the opportunity for issuing another proclamation, which the decision of the Court of Appeals, and the loss of his Police force, afforded him. We have not been disappointed. He sent a message to the Common Council last evening, which, to characterize in the mildest terms possible, must be called an impudent piece of railing at the highest authorities known to the State. Mayor WOOD calls a law of the legislature, which has received the sanction of the last Court of Appeal, "outrageous and tyrannical," and he scolds away roundly in the most insulting and petulant epithets at his command. "Bold tyranny," "profligate legislature," "partisan desire," "ruling dynasty," are the terms which Mayor WOOD applies to his political opponents. He recommends an address to the people of the State to excite their sympathies in behalf of this unhappy City. But the sympathies of the people of the State had been excited in behalf of our ill-governed City by appeals of a very different character from those made by our Mayor. There are to be ten thousand copies of the message printed for distribution at the public expense. It will give a good job to the Corporation Printer, and the message will not do any harm, but the money they will cost might have been expended for better uses.

The Last Illness of Governor Marcy.

(From the Albany Atlas and Argus, July 6.)

Governor MARCY was spending a few weeks at Ballston, previous to his departure with his family for Europe. On Friday he visited Albany, calling on Mr. CORNING and other friends, and stopping at Troy to see his daughter. Mrs. MARCY was visiting some friends in the West, previous to her departure; and other members of his family were absent with the like motive, and he was comparatively alone at the time of his decease. He was however, in apparently excellent health and buoyant spirits. It is only since his death that we learn of his having been subject of late of palpitation of the heart; but the symptoms had not alarmed him, nor occasioned unusual care to his friends.

The first announcement of his death came to our citizens by the passengers on the Saratoga train. A despatch to this office confirmed the sad intelligence; and later in the day the following letter brought us the painful details:—

BANS SOUCI HOTEL, BALLSTON SPA, Saturday, July 4, 1857.

Editors Atlas and Argus:

Hon. W. L. MARCY died at this place to-day, about 12½ o'clock P. M. He had been enjoying excellent health and spirits until last evening, when he felt somewhat fatigued. This morning, he complained of a slight pain, or "stitch"—as he termed it—in his back. About 11 o'clock A. M., accompanied by one of our citizens, he walked to the residence of Dr. E. MOORE, which is about one quarter of a mile from the hotel. He did not complain of serious indisposition while at the Doctor's residence, and not finding the physician in, on being asked if a carriage should be ordered to take him to the hotel, he refused to take one, and walked back. On arriving at the hotel, he requested the office clerk to send the Doctor to his room; and the Doctor soon arriving, was sent up to the Governor's room, but, on rapping, received no answer. The Doctor returned to the hotel office and informed the clerk, and it was supposed that the Governor had gone to visit some friends in the house. The Doctor, however, after waiting a few minutes, again went up to his room, opened the door, and found him lying on his couch, with a book upon his breast, DEAD! It could not have been more than twenty minutes from the time he was in the hotel office until he was so found by the physician. He died, probably, of disease of the heart; not a muscle was distorted, nor any article of apparel, or furniture in the room, disturbed. He had pulled off his boots and put on his slippers. S. G.

Yesterday morning we received the following by post:

BALLSTON SPA, Saturday, July 4, 1857.

Editors Atlas and Argus:

Secretary MARCY was found dead in his room about 10 o'clock. He complained of being unwell during the morning, but went to his room, about 10, on calling him they found him dead. His age was 60 years.

A few hours before his death he had written a letter to Hon. JOHN M. BOTTS, Richmond, Va.; this is probably the last letter he wrote.

He was the guest of JOHN N. WILKIN, but Mr. W. was absent at the time. YOURS, &c.

Hon. ERASTUS CORNING and a deputation of citizens went to Ballston to accompany the remains of deceased to the city; and it will be seen by their proceedings that the Common Council and the Burgesses Corps of the city have taken measures for a suitable convoy for the occasion.

We have been permitted to make the following extract from a private letter to a gentleman in this city:

BALLSTON SPA, Sunday, July 5, 1857.

* * * MRS. MARCY, who is now at Rochester, is expected here to-morrow. The funeral will not take place until Tuesday or Wednesday. The time will not be fixed until Monday, when word will be sent to Albany. The corpse looks very natural and strong hopes are entertained of keeping it in its present condition. M.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE FUNERAL BY THE ALBANY COMMON COUNCIL AND BURGESSES CORPS—LETTER FROM PRESIDENT BUCHANAN.

[Telegraphic.]

ALBANY, Monday, July 6.

Hon. WILLIAM L. MARCY died at the Bans Souci Hotel, at Ballston Spa, at 12½ o'clock on Saturday. He had not long breakfasted when he complained of a slight stitch in his side which had troubled him for some time past, and then walked about a quarter of a mile to the residence of Dr. MOORE. Not finding the Doctor in he returned to the Hotel and went to his room, leaving an order at the office that the Doctor should be sent to him. Dr. MOORE soon arrived and on going to Mr. MARCY's room and knocking at the door he received no answer. After a few minutes the Doctor returned to the room, and, on opening the door, found Governor MARCY lying on his back on a couch quite dead, with a book upon his breast. He had not been in the room over twenty minutes, and had written just before death a letter to JOHN M. BOTTS, of Virginia. He was the guest of JOHN N. WILKIN, Esq., of Ballston.

The Common Council of this city met yesterday and sent a deputation to accompany the remains here. The Burgesses Corps also sent a deputation, and will meet the remains at the Station and convey them to the Capitol, where they will be laid until interment. Gov. MARCY's wife and the rest of his family were absent at the time of his death.

THE FUNERAL.

The Committee of the Burgesses Corps just returned from Ballston, have made the following arrangements for the funeral of Gov. MARCY:

The remains of Governor MARCY will leave Ballston at 1 o'clock, on the afternoon of Tuesday, for Albany via Schenectady, by a special train furnished by Hon. ERASTUS CORNING. They will be received by the [illegible]

Interview of Lord Napier with the Secretary of State—The Cuban Appointments to be Made this Week—The Cabinet and Kansas Affairs, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, July 6.

Lord NAPIER had a special interview this morning with the Secretary of State in relation to the dispatch received by this Government from Lord Clarendon, disclaiming any intention of violating the territory of or near this Continent. Affairs in Central America were also discussed.

The Consular appointments will be made this week.

The bids for stationery in the Treasury Department were opened to-day.

GRAND TRUNK RAILROAD CONVENTION.

WASHINGTON, Monday, July 6.

The affairs of Kansas have formed the subject of Cabinet deliberation since the receipt of the resolutions of the Georgia and Mississippi Democratic State Conventions complimentary of the course of Governor WALKER. Although his conduct is not entirely approved by the Administration, it will further sustain him, believing that he acted with wisdom and justice in advising a submission of the Constitution to a vote of the people, and that he thus followed a safe line of policy.

The Southern officials are considerably nonplussed in view of the fact that Governor WALKER has met with influence by an Administration platform for the force of Southern rights, and especially by the Slavery Constitution; and in conformity with which policy Governor WALKER is now directed to be guided by the views of the Administration, regardless of consequences, will, there is reason to believe, soon be entirely paralyzed.

The President and each member of the Cabinet, to-day, received an invitation to attend the funeral of the late Hon. WM. L. MARCY. The President replied by telegraph, expressing deep regret at the sad event, and saying the pressure of public business would prevent the attendance of himself and members.

The Fourth out West.

APPROPRIATE CELEBRATION IN CINCINNATI—LAYING THE CORNER-STONE OF THE CLAY MONUMENT AT LEXINGTON.

CINCINNATI, Monday, July 6.

The Fourth was celebrated here with unusual demonstrations. The weather was fine, and business was entirely suspended. The public buildings and many private residences were handsomely decorated. The procession was very large and made a fine display, the principal feature of which was the uniform fire department. In the evening there was a grand display of fireworks.

At Lexington, Kentucky, the laying of the corner-stone of the Clay Monument took place, and there was a grand turn-out. The military display was large and fine, and the Masonic display very imposing. The corner-stone was laid by R. B. Wing, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky. Hon. R. I. Breckinridge was the orator of the day. Many distinguished gentlemen were present, the festival concluded with an extensive barbecue.

Opening of Navigation—Buffalo and Lake Erie and the Great Hydraulic Canal.

BUFFALO, Monday, July 6.

The opening of navigation between Lake Erie and the Great Hydraulic Canal at Buffalo took place to-day. Three steamers navigated the canal the second harbor. A great number of people from the neighboring towns have assembled here to witness the celebration. At 10 A. M. the steamer Niagara, Capt. TAYLOR, Captain, and having on board Hon. S. M. It is a proud day for Niagara Falls, for it has been practically demonstrated that Niagara River is navigable for steamers from the city of Buffalo to the village of Niagara Falls.

The presumption is that we appoint the most respectable men to be had for these offices—at all events they are in the interest of the City, and go forth on their duties as true watchmen, to serve us faithfully.

A thief, a boxer, or a scamp of that kind, who had practised the game of knocking down—all his life,—rushes upon one of these people, without respect to his authority or any regard to the laws of the land, and throttles him (the officer of the law) in a moment and when on duty, without regard to the officer's club, or mere personal strength. Now we would recommend that the Police be armed with muskets or revolvers. Clubs are of no service—and if they are unjustly attacked, or when on duty, to shoot down the fellow who violates the law. It is well enough to refer to the philosophy that it is better that one hundred guilty should suffer, than one innocent person, but in cases of riot—if the first acting rioter and disorderly person was arrested—or knocked down, or at a last resort shot down—the number of innocent persons actually suffering would be materially lessened! There is no fear of this recommendation being abused—to make a City (like this) orderly, the best way is habitually to exhibit the glitter of firearms—we would therefore recommend the revolving musket or rifle, (no pistol that can be concealed,) but a musket or rifle, so that the man can be marked who holds it—and the victim can be known who is rash enough to put himself in the way of it. ## Discharging Prisoners.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I have always understood that an Alderman has no power to admit a person to bail from the station-house who has been arrested for assault and battery. If this is so, by what authority has Alderman McSwoon, of the Nineteenth Ward, released a person from the station-house who had been arrested for assault and battery? and by what authority has Metropolitan Sergeant BRYANT discharged such person from station-house? ## The Sexes in the Strawberry.

Mr. LONGWORTH, the veteran cultivator of Cincinnati, in a recent letter to the public, gives an account of the manner in which he made the discovery of pistillate and staminate plants among strawberries. An illiterate market-woman beat him in raising strawberries for market, and became his teacher. She threw out a large part of her plants, and, on examining them, he found they had anthers, while the larger part of those retained in the garden had only pistils. Just enough of the males were retained to fertilize the pistillate plants. This was the foundation of a new method of strawberry culture, which has revolutionized the practice of the growers of this fruit in Europe and America. It has led to hybridizing, and to the originating of nearly all the popular varieties now cultivated. The whole tribe of seedlings came of the practice of this unlettered fruit grower in Ohio. The prize strawberries of Cincinnati are the result of judicious crossing, for the purpose of obtaining new varieties. Hovey's Seedling was impregnated with the largest English hermaphrodite, and, of the great number of seedlings produced, the Prolific, the Superior, and the Extra Red, were deemed worthy of cultivation. These are abundant bearers of excellent large fruit. A hint from Mr. LONGWORTH's experience will be of service to all growers of this delicious fruit: "I mix with my rich garden-mould one-half of the poorest and stiffest clay I can find. The result is, plants of a much larger growth, that stand dry weather, bear more and larger fruit, and the plants are never thrown out of the ground in the Spring, when the ground thaws."

Moss on Fruit Trees.

An "Inquirer" from Babylon, L. I., meets our views upon this subject by a very stubborn fact, that fruit trees free from moss grow in a very wet spot near his place of residence. He says in a note: "The cause of moss was ascribed to dampness, &c. Now, I know two trees near this place standing in the midst of a very wet, boggy swamp, which are as thrifty as I have ever seen, though continually surrounded with water; yet they are without moss. How is this?"

Our correspondent has not stated his fact definitely enough for us to determine whether it conflicts with our position or not. The theory laid down was this, that dampness in the soil and atmosphere favored the propagation of the mosses, and the true way way to free the tree from the incumbrance, was to increase its thrift by trenching, manuring, &c. He does not state that his trees stand with their roots in the water. If on an island, in the midst of the swamp, they might still be thrifty enough to prevent the parasites from fastening upon their limbs. The trees may be young and the roots may not yet have reached the cold, wet sub-soil. If they flourish with their roots in the water there must be some virtue in Long Island swamps, or in our correspondent's methods of growing fruit trees, not known in other parts. If he will publish the secret he will prove himself as great a benefactor as COMSTOCK of "terra-culture" notoriety. There are thousands of swamps in the Commonwealth that might be turned into blooming orchards without the trouble of draining. Will he please state his theory of growing smooth fruit trees in swamps?

The Southern Presbyterian Secession Disapproved at the South.

From the Charleston Southern Presbyterian.

While our sympathies lie in general with the aggrieved and "excluded" party, we are not sure but a full share of responsibility rests upon them. It is not so clear to our minds that there has been any unconstitutional act of "usurped power" on the part of the majority—though we fully admit that it is adduced a plausible upon the South and its institutions which was unwelcomed for and intolerable. The action of the late Assembly does not differ from that of preceding Assemblies, except in a more express condemnation of a particular sentiment on the subject of Slavery, and of a particular Presbytery as maintaining it. It was not properly an act of discipline, but simply of testimony, and why those who have endured similar obnoxious testimonies from 1836 until now, should so suddenly awake to its unrighteous, oppressive, destructive character, it is for them, not for us, to say. Had this schism taken place in 1836, instead of 1837, it would have been no matter of wonder to Southern men. To the North it would have been more manly and more consistent to have taken the action suggested by Judge CUTLER's resolution, rather than carry the point by indirection; for, if Slavery be in itself sin, it is properly a disciplinary offence, and the Assembly should not have shrunk from the logical consequences of its own position; but as the case stands the Southern members need not justify their secession upon grounds which to a candid mind seems untenable. The truth, we suppose, is, that the Southern portion of the N. S. body, having borne so much of agitation and obloquy in their own Assembly, and seeing no prospect of its cessation, could bear no more, while the more extreme Northern men were determined to press the question to a final issue; so that with both parties division was in a great degree a "foregone conclusion."

While, too, the whole responsibility of the past agitation rests upon the North, and twenty-seven memorials, from as many different Presbyteries, brought the subject before the Assembly, there still seems to us something obtrusive in the manner in which the Presbytery of Lexington South urged the issue, and something unguarded and needlessly harsh in their language on the subject. There is just the difference between saying "Slaveholding is right," and "Slaveholding is not wrong," that there is between every positive and the corresponding negative. The one seems to imply a positive approbation and complacency which the other does not, and hence is more likely to be misunderstood. Nor can we say that Dr. F. A. Ross, with all his acknowledged ability and boldness, is precisely the champion of our choice, either in language or sentiment.

The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, United States, was the first regularly organized company in America—the germ of the military system of the New World. It is the American descendant of an English parent, the Honorable Artillery Company of London, and is remarkable for the fine military spirit by which it is animated. For a century and a half it furnished almost the only military school in the United States. The "Ancients and Honorables" is the name by which the corps is popularly known, and its gatherings and anniversaries are always objects of public interest. On the last occasion, on the 1st inst., the 219th Anniversary was held, when, with excellent taste and feeling, the corps elected his Royal Highness Prince ARTHUR an honorary member. Considering the Republican character of all American institutions, we regard the proceeding as a peculiarly delicate compliment, which we are sure will be appreciated by the Prince Consort. It is an evidence of the cordial feeling cherished towards the old country by her Transatlantic children. When the proposition to elect the Prince had been put and carried, the band played "God save the King" and "Yankee Doodle"—times which at one time represented antagonistic interests, but are now (and long may they continue) mere echoes of the friendship which the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon race cherish towards each other.

Fatal Affray in Kings and Several Wounded.

[illegible] Monday, July 6.

[illegible] Tuesday morning, by the stabbing and [illegible] death of four persons, and the injury of [illegible] to several others. It is painful to add so sad and dark an incident to what otherwise was bright and joyous throughout the entire day.

During the display of fireworks in the evening upon the Common, one of the mortars used for throwing shell rockets, exploded with a terrific report, and spreading death and confusion around. The mortar was placed near the southwesterly corner of the inclosure in which the fireworks were displayed. Shortly after 9 o'clock the match was applied to the fuse, by a young man named PATRICK COOK, in the employ of Messrs. HOVEY & Co. The explosion took place instantly, killing COOK upon the spot. The mortar, or a piece of it, struck Mr. COOK upon the breast, left shoulder and cheek bone. The bones of the shoulder, upon which evidently the heaviest portion of the blow fell, were broken almost to a crush.

JOHN MCMAHAN, a boy 14 years old, who sat upon the fence near by, was struck with a piece of the mortar, which resulted in his instant death. The iron took effect upon one side of his head, which was mangled and disfigured in a horrid manner.

Mr. ASA L. LIBBEY, a cabinet maker, who resides at No. 38 West Centre-street, was standing upon the Charles-street mall, in company with a lady, and was hit by a piece of the flying metal. The iron penetrated the waist of his pantaloons, passed into the cavity of the abdomen, to the backbone. His shoulder was also grazed. He was at once conveyed into the building within the enclosure, and thence in a carriage to his house, but on the way he expired, and was carried over the threshold he had left but a short time before, a ghastly, mutilated corpse.

The fourth person killed was a well-known and most estimable and worthy citizen, Mr. GEORGE P. TEWKESBURY, until recently, for several years Harbor Master for the port of Boston. He was reclining upon one of the fireworks frames, which had been let down after being used. A fragment of the mortar struck him upon the left side of the face and head, inflicting a terrible wound. The bones were staved in and mashed. The wound was frightful to behold. He became insensible at once. As soon as possible a litter was obtained from Police Station No. 2, upon which he was conveyed to the Hospital, where he died unconscious about 11 o'clock, an hour and a half after the accident. He was 49 years old, and leaves a wife, three sons and four daughters. His loss will be a deep affliction to a most affectionate and beloved family.

Mr. WYNEMAN MARSHALL was struck by a fragment, taking effect upon the left cheek bone and shoulder blade. He was much injured, though, we are happy to state, his physician considers him out of danger. Had the furious missile struck between the parts above stated, where there was no bone for protection, the blow would have proved fatal. He remained in bed through the day, yesterday, and by prudence and care may recover in ten days or a fortnight.

JOHN W. ROBINSON, a stevedore, No. 50 Hull-street, was struck in the head and seriously injured. It is supposed his skull was partially fractured. His physician, Dr. JOHNS, last evening, was of opinion that he would recover. He was outside the enclosure.

A number of other persons were more or less injured, but whose names are not known. It is only, it would seem, by a providential [illegible] that the lives of scores were not [illegible] shower of iron flow, with fearful rapidity, in every direction. The fragment which killed [illegible] weighed some [illegible] pounds, and was hurled over the heads of full five hundred ladies and gentlemen, seated on benches along the inner borders of the enclosure.

The bodies of COOK and MCMAHAN were carried into the house upon the ground, where they were kept for the night.

Mr. LIBBEY belongs in East Eliot, Me., where he has a wife and several children. He was 44 years old. At the time of the accident he had a young lady—Miss TOWN—upon his left arm. While engaged in some pleasant conversation he was struck down—alas never to utter another word.

Mr. TEWKESBURY was about 300 feet from the mortar; the boy MCMAHAN was about one rod. Mr. TEWKESBURY was attended by Dr. GEORGE S. JOHNS and Dr. HALL, who were on the spot at the time of the accident, and afterwards by Dr. STRONGH and Dr. TOWNSEND. Dr. STRONGH is to hold an inquest Tuesday, at 11 A. M., upon the body of LIBBEY, and Wednesday upon that of Mr. TEWKESBURY. The funeral of Mr. TEWKESBURY will take place on Tuesday. Family services will be held at the residence of the deceased, No. 2 Phillips-place; from thence to Rev. Mr. GAYLORD's Church, Hanover-street, where public rites will be solemnized. The body will be deposited in Mount Auburn.

MCMAHON was the son of JOHN MCMAHON, No. 2 Hartford-place.

The scene of the calamity was yesterday visited by thousands of interested spectators. The spot on which COOK fell is marked by blood-stained grass—an area of a foot square or more.

The cause of the accident is not known, so far as we are aware, for a certainty. Some assert that the mortar was defective; others that it was imperfectly loaded; others that the fuse to the shell was short, and communicated at once with the inflammable materials; and others that there was carelessness in applying the match.

Texas Items.

The experiments made this year of wheat-growing in middle Texas have succeeded well. Black prairie land being deemed the best, producing upwards of twenty bushels to the acre, of heavy wheat. Strange as it may appear, we may and can have in this region, sugar cane and wheat, cotton and tobacco, corn and oats, oranges and apples, all growing upon the same plantation. And shortly, the camel, the ox, the mule, merine and cashmere will be seen grazing together on the prairies of Texas.

The San Antonio Herald, of the 18th, has the following paragraphs:

It is rumored that three of the murderers of Mrs. GARAZA were arrested at Corpus Christi, and that while on their way to this place or the scene of the murder, they were put to death. The report is not credited, however, as a reward of $500 being offered for the apprehension of the murderers, it is thought that the captors would have brought them to San Antonio.

The Herald of the 15th contains the following letter from Thomas' Ranch, Atascosa County, dated June 19:

About 9 o'clock last night a runner came to my house after powder and lead, stating that about 2 o'clock that day (Thursday, the 11th) there came five Indians, splendidly mounted, to the house of a Mr. WATSON, who lives on the San Miguel, at the Laredo crossing, about fifty miles south of San Antonio, and Mr. WATSON being absent, took his wife and four children prisoners. After cutting the hair from Mrs. WATSON's head, they took their prisoners and put off. They were observed by a Mexican near by, who, discovering the Indians, had concealed himself.

I have been dealing out powder and lead ever since I heard the news, until 7½ o'clock this morning. I suppose that before this time there are at least forty of our citizens after them in full pursuit. I will write you so soon as I hear the result.

In haste, yours, E. B. THOMAS.

The Herald announces that a report was circulating in San Antonio, that Mrs. WATSON and her children had returned, after having been taken about four miles from home. It is said the party who took her consisted of four Indians and one white man. The same paper says:

"We have heard a version of the affair differing from the published account, and one that doubts entirely that Indians were concerned in it. We shall probably get the true statement from our correspondent, Mr. THOMAS, of Atascosa, in a day or two."

The Ledger, of the 18th, states that intelligence had been received at San Antonio, that Mr. J. N. FISK, formerly of the Bexar Exchange, of that place, a well-known citizen, was murdered about fifty miles beyond Austin. How, or by whom, was not known. Mr. FISK was on his way from the Rio Grande to Eastern Texas, with a Caballada.

In the Brownsville Flag of the 17th we find the following:

"On Friday morning last, at a short distance above the village of Santa Rita, in this County, a man named NEQUMECHEE TREVINO, was killed by Mr. L. E. BASSE. The occurrence took place on the road from Carlostes to Brownsville, at about 1 o'clock in the morning. Both the deceased and Mr. BASSE were farmers—both living in this County.

A story has been in circulation here for the past few days which demands investigation, and if true, should be severely punished. It is said that two of the United States mounted Revenue Officers have so far transgressed their duties as to constitute themselves Registers-General in the exercise of authority over both the lives and property of the people of this State. We have just been told that these two men, whose names we withheld for the present, recently, in Hidalgo County, overtook, sentenced and executed two Mexicans by hanging them to a tree on the roadside."

UNKNOWN MAN FOUND DROWNED.—An unknown man, about 25 or 30 years of age, was found on Sunday in the river at the foot of Twenty first-street. It was not recognized, and appeared to have been in the water about four days. Deceased was about 5 feet 6 inches in height, long black whiskers, blue overalls and white pants. Coroner GAMMON held an inquest upon the body yesterday. Verdict—Drowning.

Coroner HILLS held an inquest yesterday at Burling-slip upon the body of an unknown man found in the water at that place. Deceased appeared to have been about 45 years of age, 5 feet 8 inches high, rather slim, reddish hair and sandy whiskers round the chin; wore a small check Summer coat, blue cotton-velvet double-breasted vest, with metal buttons, &c.; appeared to have been in the water about two days. Coroner HILLS held an inquest upon the body. Verdict: "Death from some cause unknown—supposed drowning."

LONG ISLAND.

COW PENS AND COWS' MILK.—The resolution adopted one week ago in the Brooklyn Common Council, authorizing the erection of cow-stables recently destroyed by fire in the Seventh Ward, was last evening reconsidered and referred to the Health Committee for report next Monday evening.

Alderman SEARS said this place had been a nuisance for many years—that an epidemic had prevailed with the cows there for years; it had been the seat of a very offensive smell, which is thought to be [illegible] night; the [illegible] disease. The [illegible] to be [illegible] New-York and [illegible].

THE BROOKLYN FERRIES.—Mayor FLOYD has sent a communication to the Common Council, [illegible] the Ferry property to the Metropolitan Ferry Company. A resolution to the effect, under [illegible] of the Mayor and Comptroller, was adopted. A resolution to transfer the Ferries money in the Treasury was referred to the Finance Committee, to report at the next meeting.

STEAM ON ATLANTIC-STREET, BROOKLYN.—Two weeks ago the Common Council of Brooklyn adopted a resolution prohibiting the use of steam on Atlantic-street. Last evening Mayor FLOYD sent in his veto on the same, he believing the City has not the power to adopt such a resolution, and, therefore, would involve the City in unnecessary expense.

MORE STABBING.—Late on Sunday night FREDERICK SHAFFER was stabbed three times in the back, in the Sixteenth Ward of Brooklyn. He caused MICHAEL WILLIAMS to be arrested for the offence. The wounds inflicted are not serious.

MICHAEL CUE was stabbed in the abdomen at the corner of Hudson-avenue and Willoughby-street, on Sunday night, by JOHN MCINTYRE, who was arrested by officer WENDT of the Fourth Precinct. The wound inflicted is slight.

THE FLATBUSH-AVENUE STABBING AFFRAY.—The brothers MCGAHEY, who were stabbed in the side at the Mount Prospect Hotel, Flatbush-avenue, Brooklyn, July 4, were yesterday more comfortable, and hopes are entertained of their final recovery. They are attended by Drs. COCHRANE and HALL.

The inquest on the body of MAHONY will be held on Thursday.

THE LATE RIOTS.

contrary to the order of the conductor. He was at length told by the conductor that he must either put his cigar out or submit to be ejected from the car. He would not put his cigar out or throw it away, so he was ejected accordingly. Shortly afterwards another young man jumped upon the same car, having a lighted cigar in his mouth, and he also insisted upon smoking, the result of which was that he was forcibly expelled from the car.

In the evening a large gang of young men, supposed to have been mustered by the two participators above named, assembled in the First-ward, in the vicinity of Seventeenth-street, and began insulting the conductors and drivers of the different cars as they passed by. They became at length more daring and unscrupulous in their conduct, and began to jump upon the cars and compel the conductors to deliver up their passenger money. The conductors of course resisted this procedure. Some conductors who were the most decided in their opposition to the demands made upon them, were knocked into and kicked and beaten without mercy. The names of the three men reported are Patrick Dever, William Cassels and a Mr. Cummins. A driver also got badly beaten. None of the parties fortunately were very badly hurt. One gentleman had his watch taken from him, at least so it was reported in the Superintendent of the road this morning.

Nine or ten cars were stopped at one time by a gang of the rowdies, who blockaded the track and would not allow them to pass. A large crowd collected at the scene of the difficulty, and fears were apprehended of a riot. The Police of the 8th Ward were called for, but they were unable to disperse the crowd. Capt. Baker of the 17th Ward, with a number of men, also arrived upon the ground, but the two combined Police forces were ineffectual in their attempts to disperse order.

A call was sent to No. 69 White-street, and the 20th Regiment sent to the scene of the disturbance. When it was learned that the military were coming the crowd quickly dispersed.

A third attempt was made subsequently to get up a second disturbance, but ineffectually. No arrests were made in either case.

The Board of Supervisors.

THE METROPOLITAN POLICE COMMISSIONERS—THE FINANCIAL CONDITION, CAUSES TO AND REMEDIES.

The Board of Supervisors met yesterday afternoon President Sturges in the chair.

Supervisor Blunt moved to take from the table the communication of the Metropolitan Police Commissioners, containing an account of their financial necessities for the year.

His motion was carried.

He then moved that it be referred to the Committee on Annual Claims, which was carried.

Supervisor Tucker made a strenuous opposition to the passage of bills to the County Treasurer for contingencies. He said the new Charter had closed that fund to the Treasury, and he was glad of it, for it had been a source of robbery from the time it was made.

Notwithstanding his opposition, several reports were then referred; but before the adjournment they were reconsidered and referred to the Comptroller.

The Board then adjourned to Thursday next.

Board of Aldermen.

APPOINTMENT OF THE MAYOR—SENATOR THURSTON—RESOLUTIONS TO PLACE THE POLICE STATION-HOUSES IN THE HANDS OF THE NEW COMMISSIONERS.

The Board of Aldermen met last evening, President Gardner in the Chair, and a large and interesting body.

The first paper of general interest presented, was the following from the Mayor:

CERTAIN PROPERTY SUPPLIED BY THE MAYOR.

Mayor's Office, New-York, July 6, 1857.

To the Honorable, the Board of Aldermen:

Gentlemen: It has been decided that at least one of the corporate and tyrannical acts of the Legislature is valid. The Court of Appeals declares the bill creating a Metropolitan Police District not to be repugnant to the letter of the Constitution, and hence to be obeyed and respected by the citizens and the people of New-York. By this decision the heretofore imposed guarantees of the Constitution, which seemed to secure to the people of the several counties, cities, towns and villages the right of representative home government, can be avoided or nullified by combining two or more counties, and thus forming new political divisions of the State. If this is the true interpretation of the Constitution, that instrument should be amended before all municipal powers shall be consolidated in the hands of corporations regardless now dominant in the State Government; and it behooves the authorities and people of New-York to throw themselves upon the sympathy and sympathies of their brethren of the State in order to obtain a redress of grievances. If the Empire City can be thus struck down by the bold usurping of a profligate Legislature, other cities, and even towns and villages, may be likewise subjugated. If the wealth of this metropolis has excited the avarice, as numbers the partizan desires, and its Anti-Abolition proclivities the hatred of the ruling dynasty in the hands of the old and [illegible] Democratic party, and [illegible] to keep the peace, preserve the lives or secure the property of the citizens. These necessary and hitherto peacefully executed functions of civil government seem to require a standing military force to enforce their execution. To this condition have we come at last—the result of the State usurping to itself our municipal rights—and we have no redress except by appeal to that higher court of popular sovereignty, which sooner or later must "review the decision." Therefore it is that I recommend an address to our brethren of the interior, calling upon them to aid us in this hour of our deepest need, and to stand by us in a determined effort to restore to us, and to the people of this City their chartered rights and the consequent available inherent privileges of self-government. FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Alderman Tucker moved that it take the usual course.

Alderman Turner moved that it be enclosed and returned to His Honor. He considered it an incendiary document, and one that should not be received by the Board.

Alderman Monchan moved as an amendment that 5,000 copies be printed and circulated throughout the State.

Alderman Tucker hoped no more than the usual number would be printed; for it should be thrown under the table. It was a mere buncombe document, containing much that was false, and nothing that should be read.

Alderman Wilson moved, as an amendment to the amendment that 10,000 copies be printed and circulated.

Alderman Owens moved that the matter be laid on the table. Lost by a vote of 14 to 8.

The President then put the amendment to the amendment—10,000 copies.

Before the vote had been taken, moved to strike out the "10,000 copies."

The Chair would not entertain the motion.

Alderman Turner protested against such outrageous proceedings.

The motion to print 10,000 copies was carried by a vote of 14 to 8.

AN OBSERVATORY.

Another message was received from the Mayor, with a communication from the Chamber of Commerce, asking for a site for a time and weather observatory on the Battery. The Mayor agreed with the Chamber, and both communications were referred to the Committee on Arts and Sciences.

TRANSFER OF THE POLICE DEPARTMENT PROPERTY.

The following preamble and resolution were offered by Alderman Valentine:

Whereas, By previous action of the Common Council, the Finance of the Board of Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police for suitable accommodations for the Police force under their direction was declined by a majority vote, acting under the instruments of distinguished counsel; and

Whereas, By the decision of the Court of Appeals the validity of the bill constituting a Metropolitan Police is clearly established; and,

Whereas, It is incredulent that the City should be called upon to pay for two sets of Police property, therefore

Resolved, That all the Station-houses and property appertaining thereto belonging to the City, and all Police accoutrements, telegraphic apparatus and other property belonging to the Police Department of this City, be given into the possession and for the use of the Board of Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police, and that the same be duly executed by the Chief of Police; be assigned for the use of the Deputy Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police, if the Board so desire.

A motion was made to refer to the Committee on Police.

Alderman Tucker hoped the matter would not be referred. The resolution should be passed at once. They were all familiar with the subject, and knew that the Commissioners must have the use of the Police Department property. They knew the state the City was in, and that the Metropolitan Commissioners had no telegraph, nor no station-houses for prisoners nor lodgers. There should be no delay in the matter, as there was no other police force now in existence. It was a plain case—everybody knew that there was no other responsibility. If the matter should be delayed, the responsibility would rest with the Board of Aldermen. He again hoped there would be no reference, and moved the adoption of the resolution.

Alderman Brady could see no cause why the matter should be delayed. Let them look at whose hands the Station-Houses were now in. They were in the hands of the old and [illegible] Police, and were open to keys to run out and [illegible] the Metropolitan Police Commissioners. He said he would direct that the keys of them should be surrendered to enter. It was all crazy. The Metropolitan Commissioners should have the Station-Houses immediately. Look at the crime that had been committed. Nobody was safe. Let the matter be referred, and then say whether the Board should not be ashamed.

Alderman Brennan said that after the unanimously (Aldermen Tucker and Brady) had got off their brimstone speeches against a reference, which was contrary to their own wishes, so that they might get a merry in the nigger journals, he hoped the matter would be referred.

Alderman Tucker repeated that in his opinion, the Police Department property should be given to the Metropolitan Commissioners immediately. If the Mayor had given them possession on Friday night, instead of locking them up, he believed there would not have been a riot. Instead of doing that he had placed his Captains there to keep them closed. If they did not let the Metropolitans in, the City could be put to the expense of erecting such other Station-houses as the Commissioners should choose to erect. In many Wards there were no place for the Policemen to put prisoners, and he hoped they would not longer remain so.

The Commissioners on Police had enough to do, without this matter, which they could not throw into new light upon. It was not so complicated as the matter of the other evening, involving more than a million of dollars, which was hurried through before Aldermen had had an opportunity of reading it. The Police matter every one knew, and he hoped the Commissioners would be let in to-morrow. As it was now the Commissioners could not get in.

Alderman Jackson thought the matter a serious one, and that it should be settled without trifling. He was inclined to the opinion of Alderman Tucker, that it should not be delayed, in view of the existing insubordination. He would favor a reference, requiring a report on Wednesday night. He made motion to that effect.

Alderman Wilson hoped the gentleman would withdraw his motion. It was an important matter, this giving City property into the hands of foreigners and strangers. He hoped the matter would be referred to the Committee to report when prepared.

Alderman Jackson thought this different from other cases. If the matter were delayed, the Commissioners would build Station-Houses, and the City would have to pay for them. It was no matter how they thought of the law; it had been declared constitutional, and it was their duty to obey it. When he was elected to the Presidency of the Board of Supervisors, he told them the only course they could pursue to nullify the action of the State Legislature was to resign. But they had not taken that course, and now they were bound to obey the law. He thought the Committee could report on Wednesday night.

Alderman Monchan did not mean to oppose the law any further. He had opposed it as strenuously as a man could, until it was decided to be constitutional. But this was an important matter; it involved property to the amount of $300,000. Pass the resolution as presented, and the Board would have no further control of the City property in the Police Department. He hoped the matter would be referred, so that the Committee could make an able report.

Alderman Blunt could not see what need there was of a reference. The law required them to furnish station-houses, &c., to the Commissioners. It was ridiculous to say they were not familiar with the subject, when they had been opposing the law with all their might for several weeks. He had expected that the Station-houses would have been given up immediately. He had gone to take charge of the Fifteenth Ward Station-house, but found it closed and the windows all knocked out.

The motion to refer to the Committee to report on Wednesday, was now put and carried by a vote of 19 to 5.

The following was then offered by Alderman Blunt:

Whereas, The Metropolitan Police Bill passed the Legislature April 15, 1857, authorizing a change in the Police laws of this City; and as the same was declared by His Honor the Mayor, after consulting with able counsel, to be unconstitutional, and as he requested the new Police Commissioners to withhold their action, until the same had been decided by the Courts; and as his Honor agreed in case the law was declared constitutional, to cooperate with them in carrying out the laws; and

Whereas, By the 14th section of said law, the Common Council is bound to furnish a sufficient number of Station-Houses for the accommodation of the Police; and as this law has been declared constitutional and binding on the City, be it therefore

Resolved, That all the Police Station-Houses used by the Municipal Police, together with all the telegraphic apparatus attached to the same, be and are hereby placed at the disposal of the Metropolitan Police Commissioners, in accordance with the law before mentioned.

Alderman Coulter moved to dispense with the reading, as it was the same as the other, and refer it to the Committee.

Alderman Blunt claimed that it was not, inasmuch as it stated how the Station houses were to be given to the Commissioners. He moved its adoption.

The Chair would not entertain the motion.

Alderman Coulter's motion was put and carried.

Alderman Blunt offered another resolution, transferring the Fifteenth Ward Station-house to the Commissioners, which met a similar fate.

AN INVITATION TO THE GREAT EASTERN.

The President asked leave to offer the following, which was read and its consideration postponed for two days:

Whereas, The enterprise and genius of the merchants and mechanics of Great Britain have recently constructed a monster steamer which will require for her reception the most capacious harbors of the world; and

Whereas, Such advantages, as well in facility of entrance as in depth of water, are to be found most slightly united in the harbor of New-York; therefore

Resolved, That the proprietors or parties having the steamship Great Eastern under control, are hereby invited to make the City of New-York her first port of destination, and that in case the invitation be accepted the hospitalities of the City be tendered to the officers of said vessel during the continuance of the said visit.

Resolved, That in view of the misrepresentations which have been made against the facilities of the Harbor of New-York to receive the Great Eastern, or to meet the future wants of commerce, in the way of monster steamers, his Honor the Mayor be and he is hereby empowered to appoint a messenger to present this resolution to the proper parties in England, and also to lay before the said parties proofs in way of charts and soundings, to the assurance to the Harbor of New-York, to establish its unlimited capacity to meet any demands the progress of naval architecture hereafter may put forth.

Resolved, That the sum of $2,000 be and is hereby appropriated for the expenses of the messenger, who shall be charged with the custody and care of this commission.

THE GANSEVOORT PROPERTY.

A resolution was presented to appoint a Committee to inquire and report what the Gansevoort property could be purchased for.

Alderman Brady said that property belonged to the City already. He remembered when it was purchased. He moved to lay the resolution on the table, which was lost, and the original resolution was adopted.

APPOINTMENTS BY CHARLES DEVLIN CONFIRMED.

Mr. Charles Devlin, as Street Commissioner, sent in two appointments for Surveyors.

Aldermen Tucker had no objection to the men, but as who was Street Commissioner was to be decided by the courts, he thought it would be wise to wait a few days before confirming them; because if they did any work, and Mr. Devlin should not be declared Street Commissioner, there would be trouble.

They were confirmed by a vote of 14 to 6.

A series of resolutions were received from the Councilmen, relating to the death of Secretary Marcy, which were passed unanimously.

The Board then adjourned until five o'clock this evening.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met on Monday afternoon, the President, J. N. Phillips, Esq., in the chair. There was an unusual crowd in the lobby. The following resolutions and preamble were offered by the President and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Intelligence has been received of the sudden decease of Hon. W. L. Marcy, late Secretary of the United States Government, and

Whereas, The people of this State have again been called to mourn the loss of one of its statesmen, who has filled various offices of honor and trust, having twice been elected Governor of this State, as well as filling the important and responsible position of Secretary at War during the campaign with Mexico, the duties of which he discharged with credit to himself and fidelity to his country; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Common Council of the City of New-York do hereby join with their fellow-citizens in expressing their sorrow for the loss of one of our most valuable statesmen, whose fidelity to the charges intrusted to his care as Secretary of the United States in different capacities and as Governor of the State, merit their approbation, and the sincere condolence of all is tendered to the bereaved friends and relatives of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the Common Council transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That the flags be displayed at half-mast on the City Hall on Wednesday next during the day of the funeral. Adopted.

Councilman Haswell offered a resolution that the Common Council proceed to Albany to attend the funeral of Hon. Wm. L. Marcy. Adopted.

Councilman Hughes presented the subjoined:

Resolved, That Mr. William Mackellar, Clerk of the Chief of Police, be hereby authorized and directed to detain in his custody the books, papers and other property belonging to the City of New-York, and heretofore used in the Police Department, and to take all necessary and proper measures to preserve the same, until further orders of the Common Council.

Resolved, That Wm. Mackellar be and hereby is authorized and empowered to employ two competent persons, at a salary not to exceed the amount heretofore paid to policemen, to assist him to write up and perfect the records of the Police Department, and to make up the semi-annual reports of the doings of the Department to July 1, 1857, and that the expenses of the same be paid out of the money raised for Police purposes.

Referred to the Committee on Police.

Councilman Boots submitted the following:

Whereas, It is a matter of doubt with the late Municipal Police as to whether they will be remunerated for their services, from the time they were last paid until the period of their disbandment; and inasmuch as the said men continued faithful in the discharge of their duty in the protection of the public peace, life, and property, demanding that they were acting under the true meaning of the law, and our citizens receiving the benefit of their services: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee of Police examine and report upon the circumstances, to communicate with the Comptroller, and to devise the best means for the settlement and payment of the Police of this city lately disbanded.

The matter was referred.

Councilman Haswell moved that a Select Committee be appointed to consider and report their views upon the propriety of the construction of a Foundling Hospital.

Referred to Committee on Almshouses.

Councilman Hardman offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Chief Engineer be and hereby is authorized
